Big Rivers' ability to survive in doubt

By Chuck Stinnett

Doubts concerning the future viability of Big Rivers Electric Corp. were a topic of discussion before state regulators on Thursday.

Big Rivers' two biggest customers — the Century Aluminum and Rio Tinto Alcan aluminum smelters,

■ Company seeking to regain investment-grade credit rating which together account for 65 to 70 percent of its sales — have each served notice that they will terminate their power contracts.

As a result, both the Standard & Poor's and Fitch Ratings agencies in early February downgraded Big Rivers' credit rating to BBB- — which is speculative or "junk" status — with a "negative" outlook. The Moody's Investors Service took similar action.

Further, Big Rivers' own auditor, KPMG, is actively evaluating whether there is "substantial doubt" of the company's "ability to continue as a going concern for a reasonable period of time," according to a memo from the auditing firm to Big Rivers' chief financial officer.

The termination of the Century contract in August and Alcan's in January 2014 will cost Big Rivers tens of millions of dollars of electricity sales.

The contract cancellations might also cause Big Rivers to lose access to a pair of $50 million lines of credit from two lenders: CoBank and the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corp.

Big Rivers also must present a plan next week to the federal Rural Utilities

Service, to which it owes $210 million, for how it will regain its investment-grade credit rating.

"We think we have a solid plan and it is my hope that they will agree with that," Big Rivers President and CEO Mark Bailey told The Gleaner on Thursday.

On Thursday, Big Rivers was working to persuade

WKU chief: University targeting state growth

By Erin Schmitt

Western Kentucky University is focused on promoting quantity, quality and relevancy to help better its students and drive economic growth in the bluegrass state.

Gary Ransdell, WKU's president, touched on these three key areas during a Rotary Club of Henderson meeting Thursday. Ransdell capped off a month of education speakers at Rotary's weekly meetings.

Since Ransdell became the college's president in 1997, enrollment at Western has increased from 14,000 to 21,000. The number of bachelor's degrees earned yearly has also risen from 2,500 to more than 4,000.

"It's important because we have to drive up the number of baccalaureate degree holders in the workplace," he said. "We've got to be producing graduates that go to work for your companies."

Ransdell also shared several highlights about Henderson County Hill-toppers. There are 122 Henderson students enrolled on campus in fall 2012 and there are more than 815 WKU alumni living in Henderson County.

It's not just a numbers game for the university though, Ransdell said. Western also strives to offer high quality programs that make the university a destination point for Kentucky's best and brightest students.

Pope begins retirement journey

■ Benedict urges unity as church chooses new Catholic leader

By Nicole Winfield and Frances D'Emilio

CASTEL GANDOLFO, Italy — Benedict XVI greeted the faithful for the last time as pope on Thursday, telling tearful well-wishers that he is beginning the final stage of his life as "simply a pilgrim," hours before he becomes the first pontiff in 600 years to resign.

The pope's journey into retirement began with an emotion-drenched sendoff from the Vatican, with Swiss Guards in full regalia standing in attention and prelates kneeling to kiss the papal ring — Benedict's closest aide weeping by his side.

Bells tolled as the pope left the Vatican by helicopter and circled St. Peter's Square, where banners reading "Thank You" were held up skyward for him to see. The bells tolled anew as he arrived in Castel Gandolfo, whose central piazza was jammed with people eager to catch the last glimpse of Benedict as pope.

His arms raised, the aging Benedict appeared at the balcony of the palazzo where he will spend the first few months of his retirement. The crowds cheering wildly, he said he was happy to be "surrounded by the beauty of creation" on this unique day.

As of 8 p.m., he said to applause, he would no longer be pope.

"I am simply a pilgrim beginning the last leg of his pilgrimage on this Earth," Benedict said, as well-wishers wiped tears from their eyes.

Benedict, 85, reached out to the wider world electronically, sending a final tweet from his Twitter account, (@Pontifex, shortly before his departure from the Vatican: "Thank you for your love and support. May you always experience the joy that comes from putting

Americans not rattled by budget reductions

■ Able economy lessens concern

By Paul Wisemanap
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — As economic policy goes, experts say, the automatic spending cuts that kick in Friday are — to use a technical term — bone-headed.

Fortunately, the self-inflicted wound isn't going to leave a deep scar on an economy that is otherwise looking pretty good. It's a fiscal speed-bump on the road to economic recovery, which is why the stock market is nearing an all-time high despite Washington's latest display of legislative paralysis.

That's a marked change from the past two years, when budget battles rattled consumer and business confidence and triggered big selloffs.

"Businesses and consumers have begun to look away from the histrionics and the battles going on in Washington," says Bernard Baumohl, chief global economist at the Economic Outlook Group. "They're beginning to realize that organic growth in the private economy is beginning to pick up speed."

From Wall Street to Main Street, Americans are too busy spending, hiring and investing to panic over Washington's latest budgetary melodrama.

They've seen this movie before. And this time, the ending doesn't scare them.

Even with Friday's trigger date for the cuts drawing near, Americans have been pouring money into the stock market. The Dow Jones industrial average has

Heavy hitters push prescription drug law changes

By Ben Finley
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Gov. Steve Beshear joined with the leaders of the House and Senate on Thursday to press for changes to Kentucky's new prescription drug law.

Testifying before the Senate Judiciary Committee, the powerful trio of Beshear, Senate President Robert Stivers and House Speaker Greg Stumbo pushed legislation that would exempt patients in hospitals, nursing homes and hospice centers from rules intended to make it more difficult for addicts to get painkillers.

The panel approved the bill, which will move to the Senate for full consideration. The House passed the proposal on Wednesday. Beshear is expected to sign it if it clears the Senate.

Kentucky passed a sweeping prescription drug law last year in an effort to crack down on widespread prescription drug abuse in a state where more people are dying from overdoses than car crashes. Lawmakers are returning to the law to remedy unintended consequences that subjected the seriously ill and the elderly to the same scrutiny as would-be prescription drug traffickers.

Beshear praised Stivers and Stumbo and other lawmakers in Frankfort for the bipartisan effort to change to the law.

"This issue is about Kentucky and the health of Kentucky and the safety of Kentucky and the very lives of Kentuckians," Beshear said.

Beshear had urged lawmakers in his annual State of the Commonwealth speech in early February to make some minor changes to the prescription drug law to accommodate patients who are clearly not drug abusers or traffickers. But he warned against wholesale changes,

Doolittle Raider, WWII veteran Tom Griffin dies

The Associated Press

CINCINNATI—Maj. Thomas C. “Tom” Griffin, a B-25 bomber navigator in the audacious Doolittle’s Raid attack on mainland Japan during World War II, has died.

His death at age 96 leaves four surviving Raiders.

Griffin died Tuesday in a veterans nursing home in northern Kentucky. He was among the 80 original volunteers for the daring April 18, 1942, mission. When they began training, they were told only it would be “extremely hazardous,” coming in the aftermath of Japan’s devastating attack on Pearl Harbor and a string of other Japanese military successes.

“We needed to hit back,” Griffin said in an interview a year ago in his suburban Cincinnati home. The attack on Tokyo, with a risky launch of 16 land-based bombers at sea from an aircraft carrier, shocked the Japanese and was credited with providing a major lift to American morale.

The planes lacked fuel to reach safe bases after dropping their bombs. Griffin parachuted over China after the attack, eluded Japanese capture, and returned to action in bombing runs from North Africa before being shot down in 1943 and spending nearly two years in a German prison camp.

Griffin died less than two months from what now will be the Raiders’ final annual reunion, April 17-21

Maj. Thomas C. ‘Tom’ Griffin

in Fort Walton Beach, in the Florida Panhandle where the Raiders trained for the attack.

Griffin took part in last year’s 70th reunion at the National Museum of the U.S. Air Force near Dayton, which also included survivors and relatives of the USS Hornet carrier and Chinese villagers who helped the Raiders elude capture. Eight Raiders were captured, and three were executed. A fourth died in captivity. Villagers suspected of hiding the Americans also were executed.

Griffin was a native of Green Bay, Wis., who settled in the Cincinnati area after the war and had an accounting business. He was preceded in death by his wife, and is survived by two sons.

Services will be March 9 at the Green Township Veterans Park, with a B-25 flyover planned.

Bill OK'd giving partners abuse protection

■ Courts would decide if individuals were involved in relationship

By Ben Finley
Associated Press

FRANKFORT—Couples who don't live together — including minors — could obtain protection from abuse orders under a bill that cleared a Senate panel on Thursday.

The bill, which already passed the House, would add the term “dating relationship” to Kentucky's domestic violence law. The Senate Judiciary Committee approved the bill, which will now proceed to the full Senate for consideration.

Democratic Rep. John Tilley of Hopkinsville, who sponsored the proposal, said Kentucky is one of three states that lack civil protection for couples who are dating or have dated.

Currently, Kentucky's civil courts offer protection orders to married and divorced couples, those who have lived together and couples who share a child.

The proposed bill contains a narrower provision than in some other states, requiring that the couple had dated within three years of the petition.

The bill would leave it up to the courts to determine if two people were indeed dating or involved in lesser interactions such as a “casual acquaintanceship.”

Opponents of the bill have said dating couples can currently file criminal charges, which often result in a court barring contact between the alleged abuser and victim before trial. But Tilley said a civil protection order often takes effect much more quickly. He said it also would alert law enforcement officials across county and state lines.

Tilley added that civil orders lead to services offered to the alleged abuser, which can prevent criminal prosecution and save taxpayers money.

The bill would allow courts to issue protection orders to minors. If a juvenile victim attends the same school as his or her alleged abuser, the bill requires the courts to impose conditions that cause the least amount of disruption to their education.

Tilley said the number of protection orders in Kentucky has been decreasing. And states that have added dating couples to their domestic violence laws have not seen a significant uptick in cases, he said.

“This would not be something where we're asking for an expansion,” Tilley told the committee. “This is a rare instance. But we think it's very warranted to join the rest of the country in offering this protection to dating couples.”

Group pushing for vote on industrial hemp bill

By Bruce Schreiner
Associated Press

FRANKFORT — Industrial hemp supporters are ratcheting up the pressure to force a vote on a stalled bill that would allow farmers in Kentucky to grow the crop if federal ban is lifted.

A group led by state Agriculture Commissioner James Comer on Thursday urged House Agriculture Committee Chairman Tom McKee to allow a vote on the bill.

The group included Brian Furnish, a prominent northern Kentucky tobacco farmer who lives in McKee's district.

Furnish, a Republican, warned that the Cynthiana Democrat will face a strong challenge in the next election if McKee stifles the hemp bill. Furnish is no stranger to Frankfort as a member of the state's hemp commission who was also once an agriculture adviser to former Gov. Ernie Fletcher.

Furnish declined to say if he would personally challenge McKee.

The legislation is Senate Bill 50.

Indiana town moves on after twister

The Associated Press

HENRYVILLE, Ind. — Shaan Singh is back in business running a newly rebuilt convenience store and sandwich shop. A once-wrecked elementary and high school complex is back in session. Burgers and fried chicken are being served again at a popular restaurant that had a school bus tossed into its wall.

A year after a deadly twister wielding 175 mph winds smashed nearly everything in its path, signs of renewal are everywhere in Henryville. So are the scars.

You'll find them in roofs still covered with blue tarps, on vacant lots where houses once stood. They're on Singh's hands and arm and behind an ear, reminders of the shattered glass that flew as he and his employees hunkered down when the storm roared in last March 2.

But residents of Henryville and other small communities in the area about 20 miles north of Louisville, aren't focusing on the outbreak of twisters that devastated southern Indiana and Kentucky, claiming 39 lives and damaging or destroying thousands of buildings in the two states.

Instead, they're celebrating a remarkable rebirth, marking Saturday's anniversary with a mile-long parade in Henryville that will pay tribute to emergency and cleanup crews who came to the town's aid.

“It's not going to be dwelling on what happened,” said Mark Furnish, chief of the volunteer Monroe Township Fire Department in Henryville. “It's going to be more of talking about the present and moving forward.”

A handmade sign is posted in front of the basement of Mount Moriah Church in Henryville, Ind., which was destroyed by a tornado on March 2, 2012. All that's left of the church is its foundation, steps and basement.

The Henryville school complex, which took a hard hit as some students and staff hunkered inside, reopened just five months after the storm.

Near the town's main intersection, a sign on a vacant lot signals the future return of a pizzeria.

Furnish said they're all signs of the town's resilience and determination to recover from the storm, which caused an estimated $100 million in damage in Henryville and surrounding areas.

Fort Campbell outlines impact of furloughs, cuts

Associated press

FORT CAMPBELL — With military budget cuts set to take effect Friday, Fort Campbell's leaders are preparing to give more details on furloughs facing thousands of civilian employees and local impact of those cuts on soldiers and their families.

Fort Campbell's commander Maj. Gen. James McConville has said more information will be provided in the coming days through town hall meetings.

The installation's garrison commander, Col. David L. “Buck” Dellinger, is providing details on the local impact during a media briefing on Thursday.

The Pentagon faces a $46 billion budget reduction through the end of September and has warned that some 800,000 civilians stand to be furloughed without pay for up to 22 days.

More than 30,000 troops are based at Fort Campbell, and many are currently deployed to Afghanistan.

Report: Alleged scheme netted executives millions

The Associated Press

LEXINGTON — A court-ordered report shows the top two executives of a Lexington company accused of running a pyramid scheme made almost $40 million in the last few years.

The Lexington Herald-Leader reports the document also shows almost all independent representatives for Fortune Hi-Tech Marketing made less than $1,000 per year in commissions.

Federal authorities shut down the company's operations in January, alleging it was an illegal pyramid scheme because it rewarded representatives more for recruiting than for selling products.

Attorney Stephen Amato, who represents the company, denied that it was running a pyramid scheme. Amato said Fortune Hi-Tech was a legitimate business.

Surprise inspection closes Floyd County mine

LOUISVILLE — Federal officials say a round of surprise mine inspections in January led to the closure of an eastern Kentucky underground mine because of dozens of safety violations.

The Mine Safety and Health Administration sent inspectors to Rain Coal Company's No. 1 Mine on Jan. 15 after an anonymous complaint. Officials issued 54 citations and five orders that shut the Floyd County mine down for more than a week. MSHA inspectors said Rain Coal failed to comply with a ventilation plan to control dust that could potentially cause an ignition.

Rain Coal says the mine was no longer producing coal as of Feb. 11.

MSHA says it issued 245 citations and 13 orders in January at mines in Kentucky, West Virginia and seven other states.

Father charged with assault after 6-month-old dies

ELIZABETHTOWN — A central Kentucky father is accused of causing injuries that led to the death of his 6-month-old daughter.

Elizabethtown police say 21-year-old Barry W. Williams Jr. was charged with first-degree assault Tuesday after his daughter was taken to the hospital suffering from bleeding on the brain. The girl died Wednesday of a severe head injury.

Police spokesman Virgil Willoughby told The News-Enterprise that additional charges are pending against Williams.

Willoughby said Williams told police he dropped the child on Monday while bathing her, and then shook her to make her stop crying and put her to bed.

Online jail records don't show whether Williams has an attorney.

Chemical mace incident evacuates UK dormitory

LEXINGTON — A dropped keychain has released chemical mace and caused the evacuation of a University of Kentucky dormitory.

WLEX-TV in Lexington reported the incident caused a Lexington Fire Department hazardous materials team to respond to the Kirwan IV dormitory early Thursday.

A student told firefighters she dropped her keychain and it went down a stairwell, releasing some of the mace.

More than a dozen students complained of trouble breathing, but none required hospital treatment.

The building was aired out and students were allowed to return.

Hagel receives not-so-ringing endorsement

Generally, after a hard-fought Senate confirmation vote to a top administration post, there's an all-around shaking of hands, backslapping reassurances that none of the criticism was personal and pledges of varying sincerity to work together for the good of the country.

Instead, Chuck Hagel becomes secretary of defense with a sizable number of his former fellow Republican senators waiting for him to slip up and fail, affording them a “we told you so” moment.

John Cornyn of Texas, the Senate's second-ranking Republican, offered this less-than-confidence-building judgment: “He will take office with the weakest support of any defense secretary in modern history, which will make him less effective in his job.”

Actually, it's worse. Hagel was confirmed Tuesday — after protracted and acrimonious debate and an attempted filibuster — by a 58-41 vote, the smallest margin since the defense-secretary post was created more than 60 years ago. Only four Republicans voted for Hagel, a onetime two-term GOP senator from Nebraska and decorated Vietnam veteran.

Of course, Hagel can silence critics by successfully rising to the many challenges of his job. He won't have to wait long for that opportunity. On Friday, he faces his first crisis: He must somehow come up with $46 billion in spending cuts, about 9 percent of the Pentagon budget, compressed into the seven months between now and the end of the fiscal year on Sept. 30.

And this is after three months in which the Pentagon's top brass and outgoing Defense Secretary Leon Panetta have been telling anyone on Capitol Hill who'll listen that the cuts will leave the country with a “hollowed out” military because of cutbacks in training, maintenance and procurement and the furloughs of civilian personnel.

Much as he might like to, Hagel cannot retaliate against his most vociferous critics by concentrating the defense cutbacks in their states. An early priority will be building strong relations with the House and Senate armed services committees. It will be an uphill task with the Senate, whose committee has two of his most severe critics: John McCain of Arizona and James Inhofe of Oklahoma.

Hagel faces another problem, more subtle and potentially more severe. The Obama White House periodically tries to micromanage military affairs. Panetta and his predecessor, Robert Gates, were largely able to mitigate that meddling. But they had stature and congressional support that Hagel does not — at least as of yet.

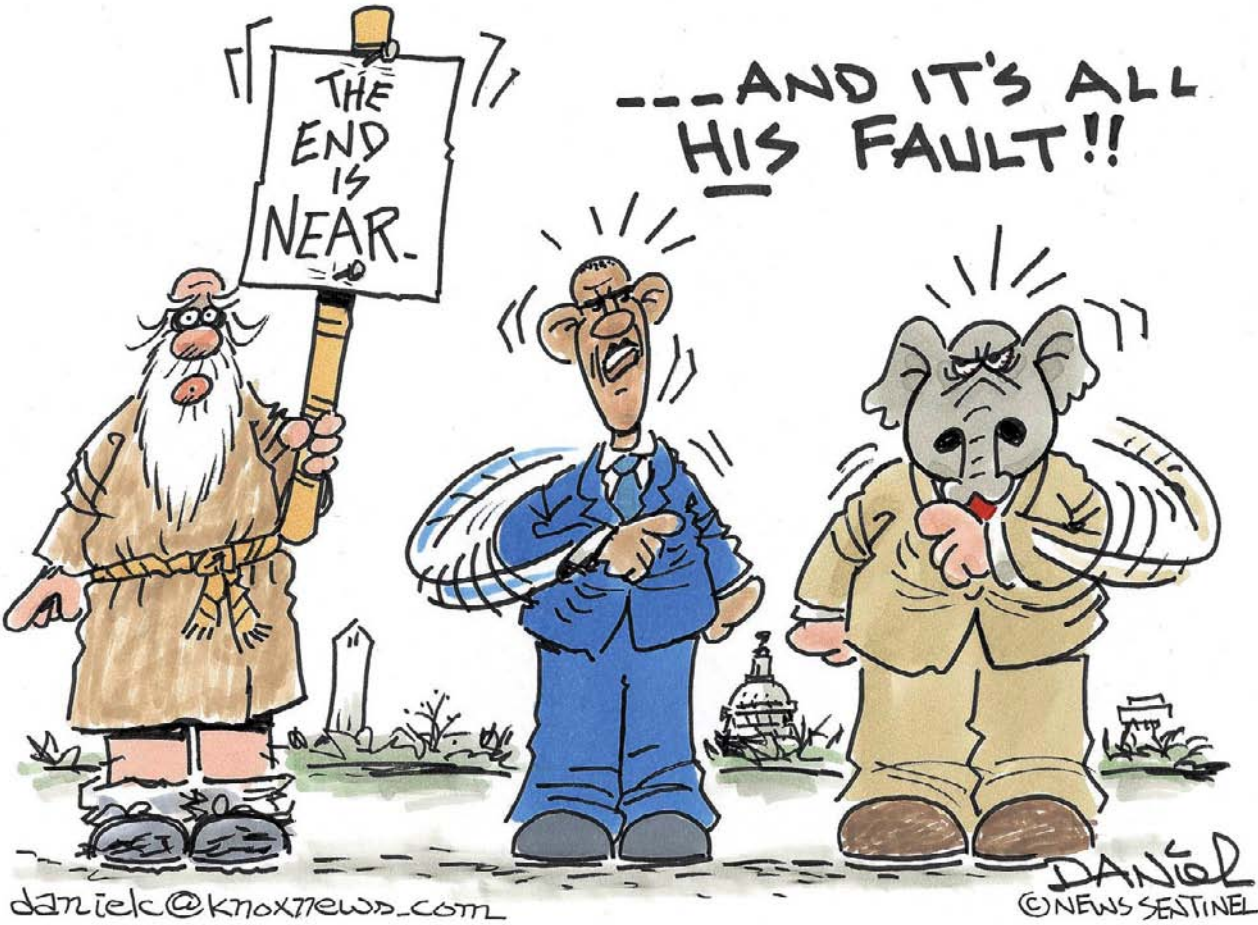

That's nothing that successfully handling a few crises won't fix.

Secretary of Defense nominee Chuck Hagel

GOP sasquatch tromps all over us

REG HENRY

COLUMNIST

Sasquatch — genus Gorilla Americanus Teapartyus — looms large, and his big footprints are all over the latest crisis.

Consider what is about to happen. Military readiness will be impaired. Vaccine and nutritional programs for women and children will have to be cut. Thousands of people will be laid off. Education funding will be reduced — and so on and so on, all the way to the poor house.

As there is nothing remotely conservative (or liberal) in taking an ax to cut the federal budget when a scalpel is required, and doing it just in time to kill the budding economic revival, it's obvious these looming cuts are not the work of Homo sapiens of highly developed intelligence. This has to be Sasquatch's doing.

That is true, too, of the process in which the fiasco unfolded. In 2011, a “supercommittee” was formed in Congress to trim at least $1.2 trillion from federal spending over 10 years in light of the long-term threat posed by the deficit. If agreement could not be reached, indiscriminate cuts would come into force, cuts so painful that no thinking person could contemplate them.

But then as now, thinking people were in short supply. Compromise turned out to be kryptonite to the 11 supermen and one superwoman on the supercommittee. Because they failed in their task, a situation that only a Sasquatch could love becomes reality today.

Members of Congress who feel strongly that federal spending should be cut have a point, but it's lost when their only remedy is to hold the government hostage unless they get their way. Like Sasquatch strolling through the forest, we lurch from one contrived emergency to the next — fiscal cliff one day, sequestration the next, debt ceiling after that. Enough already with the lurching.

Here's an idea to break the cycle of extortion for members of political factions who want to change the nation: How about winning a presidential election? It's a novel idea, to be sure, because the people provoking regular crises have forgotten who won last November.

Not only did President Barack Obama win reelection, but he won the popular vote of the American people. That fact demands to be respected.

The provocateurs think that because they kept control of the House, thanks to Mr. Gerrymander, they can do what they want. Actually not. Plenty of people like me want Congress to do its job and the president to work with it to come up with some sensible plan. Sequestration is an abomination.

We don't care if congressional lawmakers made a sacred oath not to raise taxes at Grover Norquist's urging. We think their oath of office to support and defend the Constitution and to faithfully discharge the duties of the office is more sacred. Please start faithfully discharging.

Unfortunately, things may get more hairy before they get better, as you would expect with the Sasquatch mentality involved.

We need Titanic II like we need hole in hull

We would have thought the cruise-line industry already provided enough unscripted excitement for their passengers.

The Carnival Triumph was just hauled into port, in Mobile, Ala., after an engine-room fire took out the electricity, running water and AC, leaving some 4,000 sweltering passengers to drift aimlessly in the Gulf of Mexico while a tow was arranged.

Thanks to modern communications like the cellphone, we learned about raw sewage running down the walls of the lower cabins and hourlong waits to get an onion sandwich.

There was, mercifully, no loss of life, only a lot of really grungy passengers who got free bathrobes and other amenities for their suffering.

And a year ago January, the captain of the Costa Concordia, with more than 4,000 aboard, took an unscheduled detour off the coast of Italy and ran aground. Most, but not all, of the passengers were rescued, and the great ship remains stuck.

With all this maritime excitement readily available to the average fun-seeker, it seems a tad excessive for yet another entry into that category of travel known as “Sea Voyages Gone Bad.”

Yet an Australian mining billionaire plans to recreate the ship that was the subject of perhaps the world's best-known tragedy at sea, Titanic, the great vessel that in April 1912 hit an iceberg on its maiden voyage and sank in the North Atlantic, a disaster that has never lost its hold on the public imagination. More than 1,500 people died in the sinking.

The original Titanic was deemed by the press of the day as “unsinkable” — not a claim that is being made for Titanic II, according to news reports.

Financial backer Clive Palmer, speaking to reporters, said with unsailable logic, “I think anything will sink if you put a hole in it.”

Titanic II will be almost exactly the same dimensions as the original, although with a modern propulsion system and, one would hope, better sewage and ventilation than the current state of the art in cruise ships.

When completed, the ship will sail to Southampton, England, to re-create the voyage to New York that the original Titanic never completed.

The passengers, according to reports, will be provided with period clothing and the ship will have three classes, with Palmer electing to travel third class like Leonardo DiCaprio's character, Jack Dawson, did in the 1997 blockbuster “Titanic.” Just like in that movie, the lower classes will be restricted in their movements. Once in steerage, you stay in steerage, although presumably in this more enlightened age they'll let you out if the ship starts to sink.

The original Titanic carried about 2,200 passengers and crew, but had only enough lifeboats for about half of them. Titanic II reportedly will have 2,435 passengers and 900 crew, plus lifeboats and rafts with a capacity for 3,500.

The sailing date is sometime in 2016, and, Palmer tells the press, 40,000 have registered for tickets and 16 have offered between $750,000 and $1 million to be on the maiden voyage.

Palmer may have discovered a market for recreating doomed voyages, but without the disaster element. A trans-Atlantic flight on the Hindenburg, anyone?

Obama gay rights brief filed

By Julie Pace
and Mark Sherman
Associated Press

WASHINGTON—In a historic argument for gay rights, President Barack Obama on Thursday urged the Supreme Court to overturn California's same-sex marriage ban and turn a skeptical eye on similar prohibitions across the country.

The Obama administration's friend-of-the-court brief marked the first time a U.S. president has urged the high court to expand the right of gays and lesbians to wed. The filing unequivocally calls on the justices to strike down California's Proposition 8 ballot measure, although it stops short of the soaring rhetoric Obama expressed in his inaugural address in January.

California is one of eight states that give gay couples the benefits of marriage through civil unions or domestic partnership, but don't allow them to wed. The brief argues that in granting same-sex couples those rights, California has acknowledged that gay relationships bear the same hallmarks as straight ones.

"They establish homes and lives together, support each other financially, share the joys and burdens of raising children, and provide care through illness and comfort at the moment of death," the administration wrote.

The brief marks the president's most expansive view of gay marriage and signals that he is moving away from his previous assertion that states should determine their own marriage laws. Obama, a former constitutional law professor, signed off on the administration's legal argument last week after lengthy discussions with Attorney General Eric Holder and Solicitor General Donald Verrilli.

In a statement after the filing, Holder said "the government seeks to vindicate the defining constitutional ideal of equal treatment under the law."

Las Vegas shooting suspect arrested in L.A.

LAS VEGAS — A self-described pimp was arrested Thursday in Los Angeles, ending a manhunt that began after a vehicle-to-vehicle shooting and spectacular, fiery crash that killed three people on the Las Vegas Strip a week ago, police said.

Ammar Harris, 26, surrendered to a team of police and federal agents who found him inside a North Hollywood apartment, authorities said.

Harris, whose Internet posts show him with fists full of money boasting of a high-rolling lifestyle with prostitutes, was the subject of the multistate search after the Feb. 21 attack at a neon-lit intersection that's home to posh casino resorts such as Bellagio, Bally's, Flamingo and Caesars Palace.

Court documents

allege Harris was driving his black Range Rover SUV when he fired into a Maserati sports car, killing rapper Kenneth Wayne Cherry Jr. The two men had argued minutes earlier in the valet area of a Las Vegas Strip resort.

The Maserati with Cherry mortally wounded at the wheel sped forward and slammed into a taxi that burst into flames. The cabbie, 62-year-old Michael Boldon, and his passenger, 48-year-old Sandra Sutton-Wasmund of Maple Valley, Wash., were killed.

The crash closed the Strip for about 15 hours.

Earlier Thursday, Las Vegas police revealed they had found and talked with all three women who were in the SUV with Harris during the shooting.

Police found SUV passenger Tineesha Lashun Howard in another, undisclosed state late Wednesday. Las Vegas police Capt. Chris Jones said police previously found and interviewed the other two women.

Jones wouldn't release the names of the other passengers but said none of the three women had been charged with a crime.

Militants' resistance extends battle plan

PARIS — French troops will stay in the West African country of Mali at least until July, amid tougher-than-expected resistance from Islamic fighters, officials have told The Associated Press, despite earlier government promises to begin a quick pullout within weeks.

France's leadership has painted the intervention against al-Qaida-backed radicals in Mali, which began in January, as a swift and limited one, and said that France could start withdrawing its 4,000 troops in Mali in March and hand over security duties to an African force.

SYRIA

At least seven killed in regime airstrike

Syrian rebels clashed with regime troops in the narrow stone alleyways around a historic 12th-century mosque in the Old City of Aleppo on Thursday, while a government airstrike north of the city killed at least seven people, activists said.

The rebels, who have been slowly chipping away at the regime's hold on Aleppo, received a boost from the U.S. in their fight to oust Syrian President Bashar Assad.

Washington pledged an additional $60 million in assistance to the opposition and — in a significant policy shift — said that for the first time it will provide nonlethal aid like food and medical supplies directly to rebel forces on the ground.

U.S. Secretary of State John Kerry announced the decision Thursday on the sidelines of an international conference on Syria in Rome.

RUSSIA

Putin needs vodka over chaos in Syria

MOSCOW — President Vladimir Putin said Thursday that Russia should listen to some of the French arguments about Syria — over a bottle of vodka, not merely wine.

Putin made the comment after talks in Moscow with French President Francois Hollande, whom Putin said made some new proposals on dealing with the nearly 2-year-old conflict in the Arab state.

The Russian leader did not offer any details on the French ideas or elaborate which of them Moscow should heed, but his remarks were unusually conciliatory for a man who has spent most of the past two years criticizing the West's stance on Syria's civil war and insisting Russia's approach is best.

EGYPT

Interview sought with crash survivor

CAIRO — Egypt's lead investigator said Thursday he is seeking to interview the only tourist who survived the crash of a hot air balloon in the southern city of Luxor, a British national who jumped from the balloon after it caught fire and before it plummeted to the ground, killing 19 others, including his wife.

The Briton, Michael Rennie, escaped with only minor injuries and no burns, a neurologist who is treating him at a Cairo hospital, Mahmoud el-Shennawy, told The Associated Press.

The only other survivor — the balloon's Egyptian pilot, who also jumped out — suffered heavy burns.

Many Venezuelans believe Chavez will govern again

By Frank Bajak
Associated Press

CARACAS, Venezuela — Venezuela's vice president said Thursday that Hugo Chavez is still fighting for his life, yet a recent poll says three in five Venezuelans believe their president will return to power.

Nicolas Maduro, Chavez's self-appointed successor, said on television that his boss "is battling there for his health, for his life, and we're accompanying him."

The vice president had characterized Chavez's condition similarly Dec. 20, saying the president "is fighting a great battle... for his life, for his health."

Chavez hasn't spoken or been seen since before his fourth operation in Cuba on Dec. 11 for an unspecified cancer in the pelvic area.

The government says he has been breathing with the help of a tracheal tube after surviving a serious respiratory infection. It says

Chavez returned on Feb. 18 and is at a military hospital in Caracas for continued treatment for "respiratory insufficiency."

Despite speculation by doctors not involved in Chavez's treatment that it is most likely palliative, designed only to make him more comfortable in his remaining days, many Venezuelans apparently believe — or want to believe — he is on the mend.

"The president's prolonged absence and his critical situation have not been converted into massive pessimism about his return," respected pollster Luis Vicente Leon tweeted Thursday.

He said nearly 58 percent of Venezuelans believe Chavez will recover while about 30 percent believe he will not return to power and 12.5 percent say they don't know what will happen.

One percent, meanwhile, believe Chavez was never sick.

GI pleads guilty in WikiLeaks case

FORT MEADE — Bradley Manning, the Army private arrested in the biggest leak of classified material in U.S. history, pleaded guilty Thursday to 10 charges that could send him to prison for 20 years, saying he was trying to expose the American military's "bloodlust" and disregard for human life in Iraq and Afghanistan.

Military prosecutors said they plan to move forward with a court-martial on 12 remaining charges, including aiding the enemy, which carries a potential life sentence.

Cancer risk slight after 2011 nuke leak

By Maria Cheng
Associated Press

LONDON — Two years after Japan's nuclear plant disaster, an international team of experts said Thursday that residents of areas hit by the highest doses of radiation face a cancer risk so small it probably won't be detectable.

In fact, experts calculated the increase at about 1 extra percentage point added to a Japanese infant's lifetime cancer risk.

"The additional risk is quite small and will probably be hidden by the noise of other (cancer) risks like people's lifestyle choices and statistical fluctuations," said Richard Wakeford of the University of Manchester, one of the authors of the report. "It's more important not to start smoking than having been in Fukushima."

The report was issued by the World Health Organization, which asked scientists to study the health effects of the disaster in Fukushima, a rural farming region.

On March 11, 2011, an earthquake and tsunami knocked out the Fukushima plant's power and cooling systems, causing meltdowns in three reactors and spewing radiation into the surrounding air, soil and water. The most exposed populations were directly under the plumes of radiation in the most affected communities in Fukushima, which is about 150 miles north of Tokyo.

In the report, the highest increases in risk are for people exposed as babies to radiation in the most heavily affected areas.

Professor Jeff Murray talks to University of Iowa students in his personal genetics class in which students had the option of sending saliva samples so a testing company could use DNA to unlock some of their most personal health and family secrets.

Genetic testing nothing to spit at

Classes give students idea of health risks

By Ryan J. Foley

IOWA CITY, Iowa — Bakir Hajdarevic didn't have to study for the most important test in a class last fall. He just had to spit — a lot.

The 19-year-old freshman at the University of Iowa took an honors seminar on personal genetics in which students had the option of sending saliva samples so a testing company could use DNA to unlock some of their most personal health and family secrets. The results would tell them how likely they were to get some forms of cancer, whether they were carriers for genetic diseases, where their ancestors came from, and a trove of other information.

The class, taught at Iowa for the first time, is part of a growing movement in higher education to tackle the rapidly advancing field of personal genetics, which is revolutionizing medicine and raising difficult ethical and privacy questions. The classes are forcing students to decide whether it is better to be ignorant or informed about possible health problems — a decision more Americans will confront as the price of genetic testing plummets and it becomes more popular.

Hajdarevic said he was eager to “find out about all the little mysteries” lurking in his DNA. Sure, he was nervous that he may get bad news about cancer risks. But he said the curiosity to learn about himself — and whether he needed to take steps to improve his health — outweighed those concerns.

And so, one day last fall, he found himself in his dorm room struggling to spit into a test tube that he would mail to 23andMe, the Mountain View, Calif., testing company.

“It was like 10 minutes of spitting, literally,” he recalled, laughing. “I ran out of spit really quickly. I was spitting for like 15 seconds and then I'd run out of juice.”

Such episodes have become more common as similar classes have popped up on college campuses over the past three years with backing from 23andMe, which tests for about one million genetic variants possibly linked to tens of thousands of conditions and traits. The company announced in December it had raised $50 million from investors, and was cutting its price for its personal genotype testing from $299 to $99.

23andMe has offered universities discounts on the testing for the classes, along with course materials, and has partnered with dozens of universities and high schools. Stanford University, University of Illinois, the University of Texas and Duke University are some of the schools featuring courses on personal genetics this year, according to its website.

Some of the classes are geared toward medical, nursing and pharmacy students whose careers could be shaped by genetics, while others are for undergraduates hoping to learn more about a field often noted in popular culture. Most of the courses are electives, and students can opt out of the testing if they're uncomfortable. For students whose DNA is tested, the knowledge they glean is intensely personal and wide-ranging, from whether they are a carrier for cystic fibrosis to whether they are likely to be good sprinters.

“I thought the coolest thing about the whole class was that you would be able to test your own genetics to find out things about yourself. That's what drew me in,” said University of Iowa freshman Morgan Weis, who plans a career in nursing.

University of Iowa professor Jeff Murray has been teaching human genetics for 25 years, and developed last fall's class after reading about similar ones elsewhere. He talked through the pros and cons of testing with students, and spent two class periods examining 23andMe's consent form.

“Some people just didn't want to know if they are going to get breast cancer or Alzheimer's,” said one of Murray's students, Alexis Boothe, 18. “Personally, I wanted to know.”

Breast cancer rates rise among young women

Analysis: Cause not known

By Lindsey Tanner

CHICAGO — Advanced breast cancer has increased slightly among young women, a 34-year analysis suggests. The disease is still uncommon among women younger than 40, and the small change has experts scratching their heads about possible reasons.

The results are potentially worrisome because young women's tumors tend to be more aggressive than older women's, and they're much less likely to get routine screening for the disease.

growing tumor to spread more quickly in response to pregnancy hormones.

Obesity and having at least a drink or two daily have both been linked with breast cancer, but research is inconclusive on other possible risk factors, including tobacco and chemicals in the environment. Whether any of these explains the slight increase in advanced disease in young women is unknown.

There was no increase in cancer at other stages in young women. There also was no increase in advanced disease among women older than 40.

Still, that doesn't explain why therej would be an increase in advanced cases, and the researchers and other experts say more work is needed to find answers.

It's likely the increase has more than one cause, said Dr. Rebecca Johnson, the study's lead author and medical director of a teen and young adult cancer program at Seattle Children's Hospital.

Overall U.S. breast cancer rates have mostly fallen in more recent years, although there are signs they may have plateaued.

Some 17 years ago, Johnson was diagnosed with early-stage breast cancer at age 27, and that influenced her career choice to focus on the disease in younger women.

“The change might be due to some sort of modifiable risk factor, like a lifestyle change” or exposure to some sort of cancer-linked substance, she said.

Johnson said the results translate to about 250 advanced cases diagnosed in women younger than 40 in the mid-1970s versus more than 800 in 2009. During those years, the number of women nationwide in that age range went from about 22 million to closer to 30 million — an increase that explains part of the study trend “but definitely not all of it,” Johnson said.

Other experts said women delaying pregnancy may be a factor, partly because getting pregnant at an older age may cause an already “Young women and their doctors need to understand that it can happen in young women,” said Johnson, now 44. “People shouldn't just watch and wait.”

The authors reviewed a U.S. government database of cancer cases from 1976 to 2009. They found that among women aged 25 to 39, breast cancer that has spread to distant parts of the body — advanced disease — increased from between 1 and 2 cases per 100,000 women to about 3 cases per 100,000 during that time span.

The study was published Tuesday in the Journal of the American Medical Association.

About one in 8 women will develop breast cancer in their lifetime, but only 1 in 173 will develop it by age 40. Risks increase with age.

‘Probably no better place in the world to die’

■ Fellowship Community allows elderly to spend final days working, teaching, socializing, living

By Jim Fitzgerald
Associated Press

CHESTNUT RIDGE, N.Y. — At the Fellowship Community's adult home, workers are paid not according to what they do, but what they need. Aging residents are encouraged to lend a hand at the farm, the candle shop or the pottery studio, and boisterous children are welcome around the old folks.

It's a home for the elderly in a commune-like setting, 30 miles from Manhattan, that takes an unusual approach, integrating seniors into the broader community and encouraging them to contribute to its welfare.

"It's a great place to live, and I think there's probably no better place in the world to die," says Joanne Karp, an 81-year-old resident who was supposed to be in her room recovering from eye surgery but instead was down the hall at the piano, accompanying three kids learning to play the recorder.

The 33-bed adult home is at the center of Fellowship Community, a collection of about 130 men, women and children founded in 1966 that offers seniors — including the aging baby boom generation — an alternative to living out their final years in traditional assisted-living homes or with their grown sons and daughters.

At most adult homes, a resident in decline would eventually have to go to a hospital or nursing home. But Fellowship has an exemption from state law that allows dying residents to stay there because "people have wanted to stay, and we have wanted to keep them," said administrator Ann Scharff, who helped found the community.

"We provide a space in which people can prepare to die in a way that is accepted and nourishing to them and fraught with meaning," Scharff said. "It's not something you run away from, but it's part of the whole spectrum of life, just as birth is part of life and is prepared for."

Situated on a hilltop in suburban Rockland County, Fellowship looks a bit like a village out of the past. Besides the farm and the pottery and candle shops, there are a dairy barn with 10 cows, a print shop, a metal shop, a "weavery" and a wood shop.

The 33-acre farm goes beyond organic, running on "biodynamic," or self-sustaining, principles, as much as a small farm can, said Jairo Gonzalez, the head gardener. Solar panels sparkle on the barn roof, and cow manure becomes compost.

Most of the adult home workers live in buildings surrounding it, as do about 35 independent seniors who don't yet need the services but plan to live out their days in the community. At meals, elders, workers and children dine together.

"We don't subscribe to 'Children should be seen and not heard,'" Scharff said.

Caring for the elderly is the main activity, but all the workers also have other responsibilities.

"In a typical work week, someone will be inside helping the elderly, meaning bringing meals, bathing, meds," said Will Bosch, head of the community's board of trustees. "But they'll also be doing building and grounds maintenance, planting, harvesting, milking."

Organizers decline to call it a commune but concede the spirit is similar. The philosophy behind it is called anthroposophy, "a source of spiritual knowledge and a practice of inner development," according to The Anthroposophical Society in America.

Elder care is practiced in somewhat similar fashion in at least two other anthroposophy-inspired communities: Camphill Ghent in Chatham, N.Y., and Hesperus Village in Vaughan, Ontario, near Toronto.

The area around Fellowship has several other organizations with ties to anthroposophy, including a private school, a bookstore and a co-op grocery that sells some of the community's crops. Fewer than half the adult home residents at Fellowship Community have any connection to anthroposophy, at least when they enter, Scharff said.

"We're an age-integrated community built around the central mission of care of the elderly," Bosch said. "The members want to be of service. They come because they know this is a place where they can contribute."

So Karp, the 81-year-old, teaches music and entertains the community at the piano.

"I think the reason people really appreciate this place is because they can be active and they can contribute and there's always something that needs doing," Karp said. "And it's nice when kids are glad to see you."

Other residents, or members, as they're called, have found similar niches.

Gwen Eisenmann, 91, a retired poet, leads poetry discussions and also likes to set the table before meals. Larry Fox, 74, a psychologist, treats patients at the Fellowship's medical office and said, "Where could I be at my age and be so happy to get up in the morning and look forward to the day?"

It's difficult, Bosch said, to find people to sign up for the communal life and work. It appeals to "people who are dismayed with the materialism of the world and are trying to get above it," he said. "People who are interested in an alternative lifestyle, not based on pocketing the most money they can for the least amount of work."

When elders come in, they pay a "life lease" of $27,500 to $50,000, depending on the space they will occupy in the adult home or the "lodges" surrounding it. In addition, they pay $700-$1,500 per month in rent, and up to $3,000 a month for care, depending on what they need.

home provides 60 percent of the nonprofit Fellowship Community's $3 million operating budget, with the rest coming from donations and the sale of produce, milk and crafts, home officials said. It doesn't accept federal or state aid. Workers are paid according to need, and their housing, food and transportation — there are community cars — are included.

Rachel Berman, a 47-year-old former New York City teacher, lives at the community with her 10-year-old daughter.

"We cook, we farm, we care for the elderly," Berman said. "I was in the Peace Corps, and I lived for a while on a kibbutz in Israel, so community life was important to me."

BUDGET from 1A

jumped nearly 8 percent this year and is approaching a record high.

Consumers are also growing more confident. And last month, orders for U.S. factory goods that reflect companies' investment plans surged by the most in more than a year. It showed that more businesses have become more upbeat about their prospects.

Only 27 percent of Americans surveyed for a Pew Research Center/USA Today poll last week said they had heard a lot about the looming spending cuts. And according to a Washington Post poll conducted late last month, less than a third of Americans said they thought the cuts would have a big impact on their own finances.

Why less concern this time? The stakes aren't nearly as high as they were two months ago, when lawmakers engaged in a budget standoff over the so-called fiscal cliff. Economists had warned that the cliff's tax increases and spending cuts would send the economy back into recession if they remained in place for much of 2013.

By contrast, no one is talking about a recession this time, no matter what Congress does or doesn't do. The financial squeeze will be milder. And it will be delayed.

For one thing, the cuts are smaller than they seem: Actual spending will likely drop $44 billion in the budget year that ends Sept. 30, according to the Congressional Budget. That's only slightly more than 1 percent of federal spending.

Of that, about 80 percent will come from discretionary programs, which includes everything from environmental protection to defense spending. The rest will come from Medicare and other entitlement programs.

What's more, federal agencies must give workers a month's notice before imposing furloughs, which will likely force many to take one day a week of unpaid leave indefinitely. So the pay and spending power of government workers and many contractors won't be affected until April at the earliest.

Perhaps more important, the delay gives lawmakers time to seek a deal that might retroactively reverse the spending cuts before they could do much damage to the economy.

"If it lasts a matter of a few weeks or a few months, I don't think it will have any measurable impact on growth," Baumohl says.

Scott Anderson, chief economist at the Bank of the West, estimates that if the budget cuts lasted only through March, economic growth would drop just 0.1 percentage point in 2013. That change would reduce his estimate of growth for the year from 1.8 percent to 1.7 percent.

Not that the spending cuts won't hurt many workers and consumers. And the longer the cuts are in place, the more they will slow growth, depress hiring and keep unemployment stranded at high levels.

If the automatic spending cuts aren't reversed, they would reduce economic growth in 2013 to 2 percent from 2.6 percent, wipe out 700,000 jobs and keep unemployment at 7.4 percent or higher through 2014, according to calculations by Macroeconomic Advisers, a forecasting firm.

Growth would rebound to 3.4 percent in 2014, the firm says. In part, that's because the Federal Reserve is expected to keep short-term interest rates near zero to blunt the economic damage from the spending cuts.

The spending cuts are taking effect just as the economy shows its most sustained improvement since the recession officially ended in June 2009.

The housing market, which had helped slow the economy's growth from the housing bust in 2006 until last year, is finally recovering. Sales of new homes rose last month to the highest level in 4½ years. Home prices rose in December from a year earlier by the most in more than six years.

The Commerce Department reported Thursday that business investment in buildings, machines and software rose at an 11.2 percent annual pace the last three months of 2012.

Companies are hiring more, too: Private employers added an average of 208,000 jobs a month in November, December and January, up from an average 155,000 from August through October.

That job growth is giving more people money to spend. After stagnating since the recession ended, hourly pay has risen faster than inflation the past three months. Families have reduced their debts and are in a better position to spend — although they did get pinched when a Social Security tax cut expired in January, raising the annual tax bill of someone earning $100,000 a year by $2,000.

Without the political dysfunction, Baumohl says, the economy would be growing at a healthy 3 percent annual pace.

PILGRIM from 1A

Christ at the centre of your lives."

The day began with Benedict's final audience with his cardinals, where he pledged his "unconditional reverence and obedience" to his successor, a poignant and powerful message to close out his eight-year pontificate.

In an unexpected address inside the Vatican's frescoed Clementine Hall, the pope appeared to be trying to defuse concerns about his future role and the possible conflicts arising from the peculiar situation of having both a reigning pope and a retired one.

Benedict also gave a final set of instructions to the "princes" of the church who will elect his successor, urging them to be united as they huddle to choose the 266th leader of the world's 1.2 billion Catholics.

"May the College of Cardinals work like an orchestra, where diversity — an expression of the universal church — always works toward a higher and harmonious agreement," he said.

It was seen as a clear reference to the deep internal divisions that have come to the fore in recent months following the leaks of sensitive Vatican documents that exposed power struggles and allegations of corruption inside the Vatican.

The audience inside the Apostolic Palace was as unique as Benedict's decision to quit, with the pope, wearing his crimson velvet cape and using a cane, bidding farewell to his closest advisers and the cardinals themselves bowing to kiss his fisherman's ring for the last time.

Some seemed to choke up at that moment, and a few lingered on to chat with the pope for as long as they could. But the scene

Michael Kurtz, an attorney for Kentucky Industrial Utility Customers, told the PSC that the money should instead be "retained to provide capital improvements to provide reliable service to customers." Kurtz is representing the Kimberly Clark paper mill near Owensboro and the Domtar paper mill and Aleris aluminum rolling mill near Hawesville.

"I think that strategy would be to put Big Rivers into default" in an attempt to somehow "result in lower rate increase sometime in the future," Bailey said later.

He said Big Rivers can avoid default and bankruptcy if the PSC approves its current request for a rate increase (to make up for the loss of revenues from Century) saying the new prescription drug law has led to the closure of at least 10 pain management clinics and a significant decrease in the number of painkillers being prescribed.

The law also requires pain management clinics to be owned by licensed medical providers and that they have medical directors in charge. Already, at least 10 pain clinics have shut down since the law went into effect last July.

The law requires doctors, dentists, optometrists, registered nurses and podiatrists to check their patients' drug histories on the state's prescription monitoring system, known as KASPER, before writing prescriptions. The proposed changes to the law would exempt patients in hospitals and hospital care as well as people receiving cancer treatment, among others.

The Independent newspaper reported a decline in fatal prescription drug overdoses in two eastern Kentucky counties, which officials attributed to the new law.

seemed otherwise almost normal, with cardinals chatting on the sidelines waiting their turn to say goodbye.

Benedict said he would pray for the cardinals in coming days as they discuss the issues facing the church, the qualities needed in a new pope, and as they prepare to enter into the secret conclave to elect him.

Benedict's decision to live at the Vatican in retirement, be called "emeritus pope" and "Your Holiness" and wear the white cassock associated with the papacy has deepened concerns about the shadow he might cast over the next papacy.

But Benedict has tried to address those worries over the past two weeks, saying that once retired he would be "hidden from the world" and living a life of prayer.

In his final speech in St. Peter's Square on Wednesday, he said he wasn't returning to private life exactly, but rather to a new form of service to the church through prayer.

And on Thursday he went even further with his own public pledge of obedience to the new pontiff.

The Vatican spokesman, the Rev. Federico Lombardi, said the pope's pledge was in keeping with this effort to "explain how he intends to live this unprecedented situation of an emeritus pope."

"He has no intention of interfering in the position or the decisions or the activity of his successor," Lombardi said. "But as every member of the church, he says fully that he recognizes the authority of the supreme pastor of the church who will be elected to succeed him."

The issue of papal obedience is important for Benedict. In his last legal document, he made new provisions for cardinals to make a formal, public pledge of obedience to the new pope at his installation Mass, in addition to the private one they traditionally make inside the Sistine Chapel immediately after he is elected.

Benedict's resignation will be a moment of quiet theater. At 8 p.m. sharp, the Swiss Guards standing at attention at Castel Gandolfo will go into the palazzo and shut the doors behind them and go off duty, their service protecting the head of the Catholic Church over — for now.

Lombardi said the guards would change into civilian clothes and return to the Vatican barracks Thursday night. They will continue to guard the entrances of Vatican City and the pope's palace, "even if he's not there," said Cpl. Urs Breitenmoser, a Swiss Guard spokesman.

And on Monday, the cardinals are expected to begin meeting to set the date for the conclave.

Benedict's decision has been met for the most part with praise and understanding. Cardinals, Vatican officials and ordinary Catholics have rallied around him in acknowledgment of his frail state and the church's need for a strong leader.

But Sydney Cardinal George Pell has caused a stir by openly saying the resignation has been "slightly destabilizing" for the church.

In an interview with Australian Broadcasting Corp., Pell noted that Benedict himself had acknowledged the shift in tradition; Benedict said Wednesday that he appreciated his decision was not only serious but "a novelty" for the church.

Pell also said the church was in sore need of a strong manager — comments echoed by several cardinals who have noted the 30-year reign of two popes who paid scant attention to the internal governance of the church.

The Vatican tried to downplay Pell's comments, saying it wouldn't respond to individual cardinals.

the aluminum companies pay any increased costs that Big Rivers incurs for power transmission, power plant operation or other expenses.

But Century has taken a different strategy. In January, it had bills introduced in the Kentucky General Assembly that would grant the smelters legislative authority to buy power on the open market.

Big Rivers has resisted such legislation, saying it would prefer to negotiate a contract that ensures that all costs of bringing in outside power is paid by the smelters.

"We've never said that rate increases won't be necessary" to make up for the loss of Big Rivers power sales to the aluminum companies, Bailey said. "We just don't want it going higher yet" because of the costs of handling power that the smelters buy from other sources.

"We would like to see the smelters survive and live with their own decisions," he said. "But we need to make sure that other (customers) not pay more" than necessary.

Stivers, the Senate president, acknowledged the rare bipartisanship behind the bill.

"This is a prime example where there is no politics or socio-economic status to the bill," he said. "Individuals can come together and come up with a real solution."

AP staff writer Roger Alford contributed to this story.

WKU from 1A

More than 30 years ago, WKU established The Center for Gifted Studies. Partnering with Duke University through the Duke Talent Identification Program, every year WKU welcomes 300 to 400 students who have scored in the 90th percentile on the ACT as seventh-graders.

Those students are candidates for The Gatton Academy of Mathematics and Science, which is based on Western's campus. Newsweek named Gatton the top public high school in the United States in 2012.

The live-in residential academy enrolls 120 Kentucky high school junior and seniors in classes taught by the WKU's tenured faculty and lets them participate in research and study abroad programs. By the time the students graduate from Gatton, they will have earned at least 60 college credit hours.

"It's an economic development strategy for Kentucky to do something for the highly gifted and talented students in our state to keep them in Kentucky and go to work," Ransdell said.

Before the academy's inception in 2007, most of the top students left Kentucky for elsewhere. However, about half of Gatton's graduates are continuing on at WKU and several others are attending other state universities.

Henderson County has produced four Gatton graduates.

Many of those who attend Western are feeding the independent Honors College. There are currently five Hendersonsians in the Honors College, where students earn an independent degree in addition to a bachelor's.

During Thursday's Rotary meeting, Ransdell offered good news to Henderson County High School senior Amanda McGrail, letting her know she was accepted into the Honors College. McGrail attended the meeting as a Rotary student ambassador.

Aside from quantity and quality, Western is focused on offering curriculum that is relevant to students' needs and what Kentucky can use in the workforce. Promoting ways to internationalize Western is part of this goal.

The university is driving for at least 10 percent of its students to study abroad. WKU is also one of only nine federally funded Chinese Flagship Programs. Students spend a year in China and may only speak Chinese while working for a Chinese company for a semester.

Western also prides itself on its applied research studies.

"We're taking the knowledge that exists in the classroom and putting it to work in your communities to solve problems that exist and help improve the quality of life for Kentuckians in our reach," he said.

Cols must contend with Nance, Trigg

■ Henderson will face Wildcats in regional tournament semifinals

Henderson County will have to contend with one of the state's leading scorers tonight as the Colonels meet Trigg County in the semifinals of the Second Region Tournament in Hopkinsville.

Deonquez Nance, a 5-9 senior guard, averages 26.2 points per game for the 20-8 Wildcats. Nance scored 36 on 14-of-24 shooting in Trigg County's 66-64 overtime win over Caldwell County in Tuesday's first round win in the regional tournament.

"There's not a whole lot you can do with Nance. He can put 'em up in a hurry," Henderson County coach Tyler Smithhart said. "Obviously, he's the focal point, but they've got shooters on both wings. They've got solid post play, and they are one of the hottest teams in the region right now."

Trigg County has won seven straight games and 11 of its last 12. A last-second putback by David Wease on Tuesday extended the coaching career of Mike Wright, who is retiring after 16 seasons in two different stints as the Wildcats' head coach.

"They've got a ton of momentum from that game," Smithhart said after his team's first-round game that saw Henderson County beat Christian County 63-56 after having a 19-point lead at the start of the fourth quarter.

"We lost some of our momentum at the end a little bit. But you get that back in practice. We can generate that momentum again but that comes down to what we do in practice."

Henderson County (25-5) is seeking its first trip to the regional final since 2010, while Trigg County hasn't played in the championship game since winning the region in 1997 when Wright was in the first of his two stints with the Wildcats.

In tonight's other semifinal, defending champion Hopkinsville (29-4) will face Madisonville (18-12) in a rematch of last year's championship game.

Tonight's winners will meet Saturday at 7 p.m. for a trip to next week's Sweet 16. The Second Region champion will play the Eighth Region winner Wednesday at 7 p.m. The matchups in tonight's Eighth Region semifinals are Oldham County vs. Anderson County and South Oldham vs. Simon Kenton.

Harrow has control of role

■ With point guard leading way, Cats' NCAA hopes much brighter

By Gary Graves
Associated Press

LEXINGTON— On the verge of being forgotten two weeks ago, Kentucky point guard Ryan Harrow now has control of his role and game.

The same can be said for the Wildcats' resurgent Southeastern Conference and NCAA tournament prospects, much stronger after looking done not long ago.

Harrow's 19 points led Kentucky as every starter reached double figures, and the Wildcats dominated outmanned Mississippi State for an 85-55 victory Wednesday night, the Wildcats' third in a row.

The game was the latest upswing in a seesaw season for Harrow, who missed four games early because of an illness and a family matter he had to tend to in Georgia. He returned and eventually reclaimed his position before being replaced by Jarrod Polson against Tennessee on Feb. 16, a 30-point loss in Kentucky's first game without injured center Nerlens Noel.

That low point seems distant for the Wildcats and Harrow, who asked for his job back and has averaged 15.7 points during the winning streak.

"My confidence is really good right now, really high," said Harrow, who added seven rebounds and four assists. "I'm just playing a lot better offensively and defensively. I'm starting to do more things on the court, so it's making me feel a lot better."

Other Wildcats have reason to feel good as well.

Alex Poythress added 16 points and eight rebounds, Willie Cauley-Stein 12 with six rebounds and three blocks while Julius Mays and Archie Goodwin had 11 points each as Kentucky (20-8, 11-4) pulled within a game of first-place Florida with two games remaining. The Wildcats also improved to 3-1 since Noel's season-ending knee injury on Feb. 12.

Kentucky had to be careful not to overlook a Mississippi State team that entered with a 12-game losing streak and just eight healthy players. The Wildcats easily avoided that trap, leading from the outset and steadily pulling away for their most lopsided SEC win this season.

They shot 34 of 62 from the field (55 percent), outrebounded Mississippi State 42-29 and outscored the Bulldogs 46-18 in the paint.

"It's just a fun game," Cauley-Stein said of the rout. "We just went through a lot of tough games in the last three or four games. ... It's just a lot of fun for our team, just trying to get ourselves back into a good rhythm."

Fred Thomas' 13 points led the Bulldogs (7-20, 2-13). Colin Borchert and Jalen Steele each added 10.

Kentucky was 9 of 22 from beyond the arc on a night that included members of its 1996 championship team receiving specially designed school rings to go along with the NCAA-issued jewelry awarded after they won their sixth title. Sandwiched around that halftime ceremony were two halves in which the Wildcats maintained their momentum from Saturday's overtime victory against Missouri by extending their modest winning streak.

Kentucky went on to post its third straight game shooting 50 percent or better, with contributions from all over the roster.

Cauley-Stein has been the most notable emergence, becoming the post force the Wildcats needed after Noel tore his anterior cruciate ligament against Florida. The 7-footer is the reigning SEC Freshman of the Week after averaging 13.5 points and 9.5 rebounds with 10 blocks last week, including seven against Missouri.

Kentucky's guard play has also improved besides Harrow, with Goodwin playing more controlled and fifth-year senior Mays assuming the leadership role.

That group plus reserves Jon Hood and Jarrod Polson helped stake Kentucky to a 26-10 lead after 12 minutes, a start built on 10-of-17 shooting and defense that forced Mississippi State to rush shots and mishandle the ball. The matchup between Cauley-Stein and 6-9 Gavin Ware was interesting — finding all paths blocked by the 7-footer, the smaller forward was left launching attempts that were often off-balance and off the mark.

Ware was just 2 of 7 from the field in the first half and Mississippi State hit just 7 of 30 (23 percent) by halftime. The Bulldogs were also outrebounded 23-13, and Kentucky took full advantage in leading 42-19 at the break.

Hood made the most of his 8 early minutes, scoring five points and grabbing three rebounds. Polson finished with nine points, adding to a night that didn't seem possible not long ago.

"I thought we went forward," coach John Calipari said. "I mean, you have five guys in double figures."

Lady Trojans down Caldwell Co. 48-44 to reach semifinals

PRINCETON, Ky. — Webster County survived another scare to stay alive in the postseason.

Ten days after pulling out a double overtime win over Union County in the opener of the district tournament, the Lady Trojans (23-5) came back from 10 points down late in the third quarter to beat host Caldwell County (21-10) 48-44 in Thursday's first round of the Second Region Tournament.

After settling for outside shots and hitting just 8-of-41 field goal attempts through the first three quarters, Webster County started driving the ball to the hole in the final period.

"Every one of our coaches are screaming, 'Drive, drive, drive. drive, drive. Timeout. Drive it. When you touch it, drive it.' Then all of a sudden they just do it in the fourth quarter," Webster County coach Parker McCalister said. "It's frustrating because that's what we had been telling them to do the entire game. They couldn't stay in front of us. They were fouling us."

"The shots weren't falling. We had to drive," said guard Darrian McNary, who scored 10 of her 11 points in the fourth quarter to spark the comeback.

Caldwell County, which led 33-23 with 1:44 to go in the third quarter, was 0-of-7 from the field and was outscored 21-9 in the final period.

"Defense," McNary said, was the difference in the fourth quarter. "Defense wins games."

The Lady Trojans came up with defensive stops down the stretch. McNary put Webster County in front for good at 44-43 with 40.3 to go on a layup after a steal at midcourt by Bailey Townsend.

Webster, which was 17-of-31 from the foul line for the game, hit just enough free throws the rest of the way to seal the win.

The Lady Trojans were 6-of-13 from the field in the final period but still hit just 14-of-54 shots (27 percent) for the game.

"For us to be where we are at, we're extremely lucky. We don't shoot the ball well. If you look at our statistics, there's no way should be here. That is a great testament to the heart these kids have," McCalister said.

It was another grind-it-out win for the Lady Trojans, who will face University Heights Monday in a rematch of the All A Classic regional championship.

"When you don't have people who shoot it real well, it's ugly and it's dirty. That's the way it's going to be for us the rest of the year.

We just have to fight," McCalister said. "There's not a magical play, magical offensive set or magical defense. It's heart, desire and guts."

Webster County went more than 8:00 in the first half without a field goal as Caldwell County opened up a 21-8 lead. Mariah Herrera, who scored a team-high 17 points, put in seven points over the rest of the half to cut the lead to 23-18 at the break.

Caldwell's McKenzie Ames scored 12 of her team-high 14 points in the first half. Lele Rodgers grabbed 12 rebounds.

Kolbi Edens, who hit a pair of 3-pointers, added 11 points for Webster County.

Rachel Alexandra is still improving

LEXINGTON— Rachel Alexandra continues to make “better than expected” progress from abdominal surgery. Vital signs are normal for the 2009 Horse of the Year, whose trademark spirit has also returned judging from the occasional nip at her handlers. Rachel Alexandra is grazing and being hand walked several times a day, and veterinarians are pleased with her progress. She underwent surgery at Rood & Riddle Equine Hospital on Feb. 13 after developing foaling complications from delivering a 140-pound filly by Bernardini. A section of small colon that lost blood and formed bacteria during foaling was removed.

Two Cards hurt in 8-2 victory

JUPITER, Fla. — Carlos Beltran and Jake Westbrook limped to the St. Louis Cardinals’ clubhouse moments apart Thursday. Beltran bruised the little toe on his right foot when he was hit by a pitch in the first inning of the Cardinals’ 8-2 victory over the Miami Marlins. Westbrook bruised his left leg below the knee on a grounder hit by Casey Kotchman in the second inning. Beltran’s X-rays were negative, but he said the injury was painful, and he was unsure whether it would affect his plans to play for Puerto Rico in the World Baseball Classic. Westbrook didn’t undergo X-rays.

Chapman shines in starting role

SCOTTSDALE, Ariz. — Cincinnati’s project to turn hard-throwing Aroldis Chapman into a starter got off to a strong start Thursday in the split squad Reds’ 4-3 loss to the Colorado Rockies. Chapman has 16 starts in the minors but was derailed by injuries when he tried to make the conversion to starter last spring. He started and faced the minimum six batters in his two innings. Chapman threw 19 pitches, struck out one and didn’t allow the ball out of the infield. Chapman went 5-5 out of the bullpen last season with 38 saves and 122 strikeouts in 71 2/3 innings.

Tattoo sidelines Rangers’ Andrus

SURPRISE, Ariz. — Texas Rangers shortstop Elvis Andrus has been scratched because of what the club called “sensitivity in his left arm” — apparently caused by a tattoo. Andrus spent nine hours the two days before Thursday’s spring training game against the Indians under a needle. He wanted a likeness of his late father, Emilo Andrus, who died in 1996 when Elvis was 7. Andrus tells the Fort Worth Star-Telegram he’ll be ready to play Friday. He says: “It’s a memory of my dad. I’m really proud that it’s going to be on myself forever.”

Djokovic, Federer reach Dubai semis

DUBAI, United Arab Emirates — Australian Open champion Novak Djokovic remained unbeaten this year by routing Andreas Seppi of Italy 6-0, 6-3 as the top four seeds powered into the semifinals of the Dubai Championships on Thursday. Defending champion Roger Federer defeated Nikolay Davydenko 6-2, 6-2. Djokovic will play fourth-seeded Juan Martin del Potro, who returned to the semifinals by beating German qualifier Daniel Brands 6-4, 6-2. Federer will face third-seeded Tomas Berdych, who defeated Russian wild card Dmitry Tursunov for the second time in five days, 6-3, 6-2.

Virginia topples No. 3 Duke

■ Buckeyes’ late run sinks Northwestern

Wire reports

Joe Harris scored a career-high 36 points and Virginia celebrated the 11-year anniversary of its last victory over a top 5 team by doing it again, beating No. 3 Duke 73-68 on Thursday night. Akil Mitchell added 19 points and 12 rebounds as he and Harris outplayed Duke’s top twosome of Seth Curry and Mason Plumlee, giving Virginia (20-8, 10-5 Atlantic Coast Conference) its 16th consecutive victory at home. It came 11 years to the day since an 87-84 victory, also against No. 3 Duke. Curry led Duke with 28 points, all but five coming after halftime, and Quinn Cook had 22, but the Blue Devils (24-4, 11-4) failed to slow down either Harris or Mitchell, whose dominating play kept a sellout crowd giddy all night. Plumlee finished with 10 points, seven rebounds and three turnovers and several times looked up to see Mitchell dunking over him. ■ Ohio State 63, Northwestern 53: Lenzelle Smith scored a season-high 24 points, Deshaun Thomas added 19 and No. 16 Ohio State used a late run to beat Northwestern 63-53 on Thursday night. The Buckeyes (21-7, 11-5 Big Ten) moved one-half game ahead of Michigan and took sole possession of fourth place in the Big Ten with another difficult win over a team that’s given it fits in recent years. This time, they led by 11 points early in the second half and regrouped after Northwestern took the lead, sending the Wildcats (13-16, 4-12) to their sixth straight loss and eighth in nine games. ■ UT-Martin 69, Murray St. 68: Mike Labo scored 20 points and Myles Taylor added 15 to lead Tennessee-Martin to a 69-68 Ohio Valley Conference victory over Murray State on Thursday night. After the Skyhawks

(9-19, 5-10) led 33-19 with 4:35 left until halftime, the Racers (20-8, 10-5) battled back for a 40-40 tie with 14:46 remaining but were unable to take a lead. Isaiah Canaan, now 23 points away from joining the Murray State 2,000-point club, had 31 points for the Racers. ■ Western Ky. 79, South Alabama 73: T.J. Price scored 22 points and Western Kentucky got a big boost from its bench to beat South Alabama 79-73 Thursday night. The Hilltoppers (16-14, 10-9 Sun Belt Conference), who won their third straight game and avenged an earlier 65-57 loss at South Alabama, led 39-30 at halftime and by 14 points midway through the second half. ■ Eastern Ky. 69, Tennessee Tech 54: Corey Walden scored 18 points to lead Eastern Kentucky to a 69-54 victory over Tennessee Tech in an Ohio Valley Conference game Thursday night. It gave Eastern Kentucky a program-record 23rd victory this season. ■ Morehead St. 101, Tennessee St. 100: Angelo Warner scored 23 points, making 5 of 6 3-pointers, as Morehead State downed Tennessee State 101-100 Thursday night. ■ Missouri 90, South Carolina 68: Keion Bell scored 24 points and Jabari Brown added 23 to lead Missouri to a 90-68 win over South Carolina on Thursday night. ■ North Carolina 68, Clemson 59: Dexter Strickland tied his season high with 16 points and North Carolina reached the 20-win mark for the ninth straight season with a 68-59 victory over Clemson on Thursday night. ■ Louisiana Tech 84, Utah State 61: Brandon Gibson scored 20 points, Raheem Appleby added 15 and No. 25 Louisiana Tech cruised to an 84-61 victory over Utah State. WOMEN ■ Kentucky 90, Mississippi 65: A’Dia Mathies scored 20 points and No. 10 Kentucky routed Mississippi 90-65 as Wildcats coach Matthew Mitchell tied the school record for victories with 24.

Big East breakup is picking up speed

By Ralph D. Russo Associated Press

NEW YORK — The breakup of the Big East’s football and basketball schools appears to be on the fast track. The major college football members will meet in Atlanta on Friday to discuss the departure of the seven basketball schools that are planning to leave the conference and create a new league. According to media reports Thursday, the basketball schools plan to have their new conference up and running for the 2013-14 school year and will pay the football schools to keep the Big East name and play its conference tournament at Madison Square Garden in New York. Big East Commissioner Mike Aresco told the AP in a phone interview no deal has been completed between the two groups but “some of this stuff is clearly coming down to the wire.” Aresco will be meeting with the presidents and athletic directors from the football members. The members that do not have FBS football programs will not be part of the meeting. The seven Catholic schools that are breaking away from the football part of the rebuilt Big East include some of its founding members and signature schools, such as

Georgetown, St. John’s and Villanova. The other departing schools are Seton Hall, Providence, DePaul and Marquette. Big East football is in the midst of a major makeover, with 2013 scheduled to be another season with lame duck members. Next year, Big East football will have holdovers Connecticut, Cincinnati, South Florida, Temple, Rutgers and Louisville, along with newcomers Central Florida, Memphis, Houston and SMU. In 2014, Louisville and Rutgers are likely on the way out — the Cardinals to the Atlantic Coast Conference and the Scarlet Knights to the Big Ten — and Tulane and East Carolina will join. Navy is schedule to join the Big East for football in 2015, and the conference is looking to add another member — Tulsa is the front-runner — to get to an even 12. It had been presumed that the seven basketball schools would stay in the current Big East for another year. But with a TV deal reportedly waiting for them, it seems they’re ready to ramp up the process. The seven basketball schools reportedly have an offer from Fox to broadcast its games that could earn the schools about $3 million per year, depending on how many more members they bring on. Butler, Xavier and Creighton are being talked about as potential targets.

Wizards franchise guard Wall ‘in a funk right now’

By Joseph White Associated Press

WASHINGTON — John Wall isn’t shooting well, he’s turning the ball over at an alarming rate, and his attitude isn’t quite the same. The Washington Wizards franchise player spent most of the fourth quarter on the bench during the team’s latest loss, a game marred by complaints about playing time while it was in progress. “He’s just in a funk right now,” teammate Chris Singleton said Thursday. The player whose return had been a bright spot in an otherwise dismal Wizards season has hit a skid. In the five games since the All-Star break, Wall is shooting 29.6 percent from the field and has had three games with six or more turnovers. Yet he seemed to absolve himself of any blame for his seven-turnover, four-assist performance in Wednesday night’s 96-95 loss to the Detroit Pistons. “I think it was great passes. I just think some of my teammates (didn’t) catch them, and some of them got tipped away,” he said following the game, “so just got to deal with it.” The Wizards kept Wall under wraps Thursday.

John Wall

They didn’t allow reporters to watch any of practice — a move contrary to the team’s own stated media policy — and Wall was gone by the time the gym doors were open. The team said he would not be available for interviews, leaving others to try to answer what might be wrong. “I think he’s trying too hard sometimes,” coach Randy Wittman said. “I think John loses sight of it — as well as people on the outside — the effect that he still has on the game and our players with what he brings to the game, his speed, his ability to find people.” Wittman agreed that Wall’s demeanor hasn’t been exactly positive lately. “That’s human nature,” the coach said. “We all want to play our best, and when we don’t, we all have a sense of self-whatever, self-critical, down, whatever it may be. And that’s the thing you’ve got to watch and try to protect (him) from. That’s why I want him to understand he could go 3 for 12 and still have an impact and we win the game.”

Cards' pitching future looks bright with hard-throwing young guns

Kyle Lohse is gone, Chris Carpenter is out and Jaime Garcia returns from an untreated injury. Can the St. Louis Cardinals pitching rotation survive without its staff ace, future Hall of Famer and lone lefty?

Truth be told, it opens up some exciting possibilities. The Cardinals have a whole stable of hard-throwing young colts who could step in and become the next big thing.

With a mysterious arm-shoulder-neck ailment that won't go away, Carpenter's career may be over. It's been a great decade-long run that produced three all-star selections, two World Series titles and one Cy Young award. But he's a damaged 38-year old who missed most of last season and it's going to end sooner rather than later.

Lohse had a career year in 2012, posting a 16-3 record that made him too expensive to keep. Or so we thought. A few weeks into spring training, the league's most attractive free agent remains unsigned. Maybe his price will drop and the Cards can bring him back to replace Carpenter. Probably not, though.

A shoulder injury caused the talented Garcia to miss time in the regular season and get removed from the postseason roster. He decided against surgery and chose natural healing instead. Garcia might become his old self again or he might not.

Silver linings rest with an exciting group of young guns. Some have already proven themselves. Moving into the bottom of the starting rotation Lance Lynn won 18 games — fourth most in the National League. He faded at the end but the big guy has taken steps to improve conditioning, dropping 40 pounds with a healthier diet. Young Joe Kelly stepped into the starting fire as an emergency replacement and performed surprisingly well, finishing with a 3.53 earned run average in 107 innings.

Then there are the guys who have tantalized with just a taste of their talent. Owner of a fearsome fastball that sometimes reached triple digits on the radar gun, 22-year-old Trevor Rosenthal made a big splash during his late call-up. Such speed is usually reserved for the bullpen and he may end up there. But he could start too. Shelby Miller, also 22, saw less major league action but is ranked far ahead of Rosenthal on the prospect list. After getting a very late call-up last year he took a no-hitter into the sixth inning against Cincinnati.

There's an even younger starlet in the fold. Fresh off a fine collegiate career, 21-year-old Michael Wacha quickly moved up the minor league ladder from Rookie League to Double A. Chosen in the first round of the 2012 draft, the 6-foot-6 right-hander totaled only 21 innings in his introduction to professional baseball. Expect a whole lot more innings this year. Management loves Wacha's long-term potential but he's looking awfully good right now at spring training.

Which promising youngsters will get their shot and who needs more minor league seasoning? Stay tuned.

Unique uniforms to be unveiled

■ Strange sight is coming on college basketball courts: sleeves

By Joe Kay
Associated Press

CINCINNATI — College basketball's tournament time is taking on a new look this year, with lots of double-takes expected.

Six teams will wear special uniforms for their conference and anticipated NCAA tournament appearances next month, setting a fashion trend in college basketball: camouflage-patterned shorts, bright-colored jerseys and sleeves.

Sleeves?

Yep. Sleeves on jerseys, including those worn by tradition-rich UCLA, giving March's rich history a decidedly unconventional look. Six teams will wear special tournament uniforms unveiled on Thursday by Adidas — UCLA, Louisville, Baylor, Kansas, Notre Dame and Cincinnati.

“I'm sure the traditionalists out there are really struggling looking at those uniforms.”

Mick Cronin, Cincinnati basketball coach

in the Big 12 tournament.”

Alternate uniforms have become big business in college sports, from Oregon's fluorescent tones with Nike to Maryland's loud designs with Under Armour. Adidas introduced special light-weight basketball uniforms for Cincinnati, Louisville and Baylor at tournament time last season.

Baylor and Louisville got the most attention with their bright colors. Cincinnati's were more subdued, with neon trim. Bearcats players quickly took a liking to them — Cincinnati reached the Big East tournament title game before losing to Louisville, then made the round of 16 in the NCAA tournament while wearing them.

“It's like it refreshes you as a team,” point guard Cashmere Wright said before practice on Thursday. “You go out there and it's a whole other uniform. You can take any identity you want to take. Last year, we got an identity and we just played it out.”

No. 6 Kansas, No. 10 Louisville and No. 21 Notre Dame are currently ranked in the AP Top 25. UCLA, Cincinnati and Baylor are expecting to join them in the NCAA tournament wearing their new gear.

The second-ranked Notre Dame women and No. 16 Louisville will also wear the gear.

Players like the light-weight uniforms and love the flashy look. They also like the way they stand out from the rest of the tournament crowd.

“It's an interesting phenomenon, the whole uniform-shoe thing with young people, having something that nobody else has,” Cronin said.

Adidas checked with the schools to see if they were interested in the tournament designs. Not everyone liked the sleeves — Cronin turned down the idea for his Bearcats.

“I'm happy they don't have sleeves,” Wright said.

The sleeves seem to be the biggest attention-getter, a reminder of the sport's fledgling days. Xavier coach Chris Mack wore sleeved jerseys when he played at Evansville in the late 1980s, getting over his disdain for the look.

“Aesthetically, I thought they were really ugly,” Mack said on Thursday. “But it's just ironic because so many guys wore T-shirts — I think it started with Patrick Ewing and Chris Mullin wearing T-shirts under their uniforms, which is comfortable for some guys. But I thought the one-uniform-T-shirt look was a little outdated and strange.”

Outdated? Not anymore.

Pitino says Russ Smith key to Cardinals' season

By Jay Cohen
Associated Press

ROSEMONT, Ill. — Rick Pitino thinks Russ Smith is the key to the season for No. 10 Louisville, and the shifty guard believes he can help the Cardinals make another long run in March.

He sure looked ready on Wednesday night.

Smith scored 17 points, Peyton Siva had 16 and Louisville pulled away for a 79-58 victory over DePaul that ran its winning streak to four ahead of a big matchup with No. 12 Syracuse this weekend.

NAM Y. HUH/ASSOCIATED PRESS

Louisville's Russ Smith, left, looks to pass as DePaul's Worrel Clahar guards him on Wednesday night.

“When Russ Smith passes the basketball, we have a big-time chance of being a great team,” Pitino said. “When he doesn't and he gambles on defense, we're just a mediocre team. But if we can get him to totally buy in offensively and defensively, we have the makings of a great team, and he did that in the second half.”

Smith seemed emboldened by Pitino's challenge.

“If Coach has faith in me, then I have to have faith in myself to get the job done,” said Smith, a junior who also had five assists and four rebounds while passing 1,000 career points.

Chane Behanan added 10 points and nine rebounds for the Cardinals (23-5, 11-4 Big East), who held the Blue Demons to 36 percent shooting and forced 19 turnovers.

Louisville is unbeaten since it lost 104-101 in five overtimes at Notre Dame on Feb. 9 in the longest regular-season game in Big East history. With the victory over sliding DePaul, the Cardinals moved into a tie with Marquette for second place in the conference behind Georgetown.

Pitino's team meets the Orange in the Carrier Dome, and Notre Dame faces Marquette in a big slate of games for the Big East on Saturday.

Brandon Young scored 22 points and Cleveland Melvin had 20 for the Blue Demons (11-17, 2-13), who have dropped three in a row and 12 of 13 overall.

“I think we just let up,” Young said. “We can go as hard as we want to. We just kept letting them do what they like to do. I don't think we stopped it real well.”

Melvin converted a layup to get DePaul within eight with 7:22 remaining, but the Cardinals responded with a 10-0 run to put it away. Siva started the key spurt with two free throws and closed it out with a layup that made it 71-53 with 3:33 remaining.

“Every good team is going to make a run,” Smith said. “They jumped out on us early and then we responded pretty well. I guess it was the simple fact we obviously didn't want to be embarrassed, so guys stepped up and we made some big plays.”

Young made a 3-pointer with 3 minutes remaining to extend DePaul's streak with at least one to 607 games. But the Blue Demons were just 1 for 9 from long range.

Montrezl Harrell scored 11 points for the Cardinals, and Gorgui Dieng finished with 10.

JGR team eager to get to Phoenix after enduring a Daytona debacle

By Jenna Fryer
Associated Press

Nobody is as eager to get to Phoenix this weekend as Joe Gibbs Racing, the team that can only view the Daytona 500 as a disaster.

JGR was running 1-2-3 at one point of “The Great American Race” and in prime position to put one of its drivers in Victory Lane. Instead, Matt Kenseth went to pit road with an engine issue after leading a race-high 86 laps. Kyle Busch followed him a few moments later.

Both could only watch in street clothes as Denny Hamlin tried to carry the JGR banner. He led three times for 33 laps, only to get stuck in the wrong lane in the closing laps and fade to a 14th-place finish.

It was a bitter outcome for the organization and for manufacturer Toyota, which had put a huge emphasis on the Daytona 500 and had all six of its factory cars running 1-through-6 at one point of the race. In addition to Kenseth and Busch's engine woes, Michael Waltrip and Martin Truex Jr. didn't have full power at the end of the race.

As NASCAR moves into the desert for Sunday's race at Phoenix International Raceway, Kenseth said he believes JGR showed at Daytona it's a strong organization.

“Despite not getting the finish we deserved last weekend at Daytona, I'm really pleased with how our season began during Speedweeks,” Kenseth said. “We had really fast cars and our No. 20 team had great pit stops so I'm excited with how we ran at Daytona and really thankful to be part of this team. I'm just looking forward to getting to Phoenix and building upon what we have already started for this year.”

It was Kenseth's first race with JGR after leaving Roush Fenway Racing, and he was seeking his third Daytona 500 title.

Busch's disappointment showed Sunday at Daytona. He'd won his qualifying race earlier in the week and thought he had a shot at winning his first Daytona 500.

“I'm glad to go back to a race track where drivers matter and car handling matters,” he said. “The best way to get over the disappointment of the Daytona 500 is to get back in the car and have another chance at winning the next one. I wish the race was today, to be honest. I'm ready.”

Busch has made no secret that 2012, when he won only once in all three of NASCAR's national series, was the worst season of his career. Because his temperament often overshadows his talent, he's earning a reputation as a driver who may never win a Sprint Cup title.

He said this week he's more determined than ever.

“I'm here to work hard and I'm here to win and bring home trophies and championships, that's what my ultimate dream is,” he said.

U.S. economy showed scant growth in quarter

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press

WASHINGTON — The U.S. economy grew at a 0.1 percent annual rate from October through December, the weakest performance in nearly two years.

But economists believe a steady housing rebound, stronger hiring and solid spending by consumers and businesses are pushing economic growth higher in the current quarter.

The Commerce Department's second estimate of fourth-quarter growth was only slightly better than its initial estimate that the economy shrank at a rate of 0.1 percent. And it was well below the 3.1 percent growth rate reported for the July-September quarter.

The revision to the gross domestic product was due to higher exports and more business investment. GDP is the broadest measure of the economy's output.

Many economists say temporary factors that held back growth in the fourth quarter are probably fading and growth is likely picking up in the January-March quarter.

Paul A shworth, chief U.S.

economist at Capital Economics, predicts growth could be as high as 2 percent in the current quarter despite higher Social Security taxes, which have reduced take-home pay for most Americans. Alan Levenson, chief economist for T. Rowe Price, said growth could be as high as 2.5 percent.

Ashworth noted that a sharp decline in defense spending and slower business restocking subtracted 2.9 percentage points from growth in the fourth quarter.

At the same time, consumer spending and business investment — two key drivers of growth — accelerated at the end of last year.

"We still believe that the fourth-quarter GDP figures were a lot better than the headline stagnation suggests," said Ashworth.

The economy could continue to struggle if policymakers in Washington cannot reach agreements over the budget his month, including billions of dollars in spending cuts that are set to begin on Friday. And a spike in gas prices and higher taxes could hold back consumer spending.

Still, a raft of recent reports suggests that many aspects of the economy are improving.

The Labor Department said that the number of Americans seeking unemployment benefits fell 22,000 last week to a seasonally adjusted 344,000. The steep decline comes as hiring has strengthened, providing more income to consumers.

Employers have added an average of 200,000 jobs per month in the past three months. That's up from an average of 150,000 in the previous three months.

More jobs and ultra-low mortgage rates are helping the once-battered housing market recover.

CHICAGO BOARD OF TRADE

CHICAGO — Grains futures mostly rose Thursday on the Chicago Board of Trade. Wheat for May delivery rose 2.50 cents to $7.1450 a bushel; May corn rose 8.25 cents to $7.0350 a bushel; May oats rose 5.50 cents to $3.7725 a bushel; while May soybeans rose 12.75 cents to $14.5225 a bushel.

Beef and pork futures were mixed on the Chicago Mercantile Exchange. April live cattle slipped 0.02 cent to $1.2985 a pound; March feeder cattle rose 0.55 cent to $1.42 a pound; April lean hogs were flat at 81 cents a pound.

COMMODITIES

Corn and soybeans advanced on reports that delays at Brazilian ports are holding up shipments. May corn rose 8.25 cents, or 1.2 percent, to close at $7.0350 a bushel. Soybeans gained 12.75 cents, or 0.9 percent, to $14.5225 a bushel. "The talk is of the logistical backlog in Brazil," said Sai Gilbertie, chief investment officer of Teicium Trading LLC. "Brazil has, for quite some time, needed to improve its loading facilities."

Demand for South American crops surged after last year's drought pushed up prices in the U.S. Brazil may now be struggling to make deliveries to meet that demand.

Brazil is poised to knock the U.S. from its historical position as the world's largest exporter of corn, the U.S. Department of Agriculture said in a report on its website this month.

The South American nation has had successive bumper harvests of the crop and domestic demand has fallen, increasing the amount of the grain available for export. A drought in the U.S. reduced last year's crop making less available for exports.

The U.S. share of the global export market has been gradually decreasing over the past three decades, according to the department's data. The U.S. share of the global export market for corn is projected to be 25 percent in the fiscal year ending in September, down from 84 percent in 1980.

Demand for soybeans was also bolstered Thursday by a U.S. Department of Agriculture report that showed increasing demand for the crop from Chinese buyers, said Jason Ward, an analyst at Northstar Commodity.

In other trading, wheat edged higher, advancing 2.5 cents, or 0.4 percent, to $7.1450 a bushel.

Metals fell, with silver leading the declines.

Silver for May delivery fell 55.30 cents, or 1.9 percent, to $28.43 an ounce. Palladium for June delivery dropped $11.10 an ounce, or 1.5 percent, to $734.55.

Gold for April delivery dropped $17.60 to $1,578.10 an ounce. The metal fell 4 percent in February, its biggest monthly decline in 10 months.

The demand for gold as a defensive investment has waned this year on evidence that the U.S. economy is maintaining its recovery.

Platinum for April delivery dropped $16.60 an ounce, or 1 percent, to $1,583.50. Copper for May delivery fell 1.95 cents, or 0.5 percent, to $3.5475 a pound. Benchmark crude for April delivery fell 71 cents to finish at $92.05 a barrel. Wholesale gasoline was up 0.05 cents to $3.11 a gallon. Heating oil fell 2.4 cents to $2.96 a gallon. Natural gas rose 5 cents to finish at $3.48 per 1,000 cubic feet.

Advice

Single dad looking for fresh start on dating scene

Dear Amy: How does an older (40s) single dad re-enter the modern dating scene?

After 13 years of married life, I was divorced over 18 months ago.

Between his commitments and mine, there is very little time to play the social singles scene.

Options at our church are limited. Where does a guy look for an honest, intelligent and stable woman? No drama, because I'm dating for two now!

— Fresh Start

Dear Fresh Start: One way to meet other parents is to get involved in your son's activities at (or after) school. Parents who know you and your son — moms, especially — will introduce you to single people.

Reader prepared in event of credit card theft, loss

Dear Heloise: When traveling, I always have the phone numbers to the credit cards I am carrying. I also keep a copy of the credit-card numbers at home with someone I trust.

This way, if my cards are lost or stolen, I can call the company immediately and not give anyone a chance to use them. I can get the credit-card numbers if needed from my backup.

— Teresa, via email

Dear Heloise: At the beginning of the year, I called to set up a doctor's appointment. The receptionist asked what insurance I had. She said they were renewing their contracts with insurance companies and wanted to make sure they still took mine.

I have never been asked that before on the phone. So my hint to your readers is to check with their doctors when making an appointment, even if their insurance hasn't changed.

I wouldn't have wanted to find out they no longer took my insurance when I showed up for my appointment!

Meetup.com is a simple and brilliant concept — groups form around a variety of interests and post a notice on the site, inviting anyone to "meet up."

Dear Amy: My husband of 28 years and I disagree about privacy issues. I think that as his wife I should know his email account passwords, his voice-mail number to get messages, if he is on Facebook, etc. I feel he should be an open book.

He says I am nosy and it is none of my business. He says he will do what he wants.

I think I should be able to read his text messages. He told me, "It's my cellphone, you have your own!" He doesn't lock it, but he said he will.

Some trust issues have surfaced recently, but he said it is all in my head.

— Suspicious

Dear Suspicious: I agree that spouses should be "open books" to one another, but I also believe that individuals have a right to privacy.

Trust in a relationship creates a space of sorts where individuals can operate freely and privately. Ironically, you can have all the privacy in the world if you have nothing to hide.

You two should talk this through with a marriage counselor. And you should realize that you could be given total access to every device in your husband's life, and he could still (and quite easily) do, say or write things you will never find out about.

At the end of the day, trust (and transparency) is a choice.

Hand your worries, anxieties over to God

Dear Rev. Graham: I know the Bible says we shouldn't worry, but isn't that a bit unrealistic? I could name a dozen things I worry about every day, and they aren't going to go away just because I hope they will, or because I pray they will.

anxieties over to Him.

Think of it this way. Imagine for a moment that a worry is a heavy burden you're carrying on your back (like a backpack filled with rocks).

Wishing it will go away won't solve the problem, nor will simply hoping the burden will grow lighter.

But suppose you meet someone who's obviously stronger than you, and he offers to take the burden off your back and carry it for you. What would you do?

It would be foolish for you to keep carrying it; instead, you'd gladly hand it over to him.

And that's what God wants us to do with our burdens — hand them over to Him in faith and trust. He knows all about us; He knows our problems, and He knows all about the things that concern us.

Furthermore, He loves us, and He wants to help us. The Bible says, "Cast all your anxiety on him because he cares for you" (1 Peter 5:7).

When worries come — and they will — learn to hand them over to Jesus Christ. He can be trusted to guide you, and He will give you His peace.

High B-12 level probably nothing to be concerned about

Dear Dr. Roach: I am a new reader to your column; as such, I thought I would ask you a question that I have never seen asked or addressed in similar newspaper health columns.

I am in my early 40s. I am active and generally healthy.

That being said, I have GERD, but I have successfully been treating it with a daily dose of 20 mg of omeprazole for the past 10 years.

Last year, I read that omeprazole can inhibit the body's ability to absorb vitamin B-12. I had my B-12 level checked to see if I was deficient. I wasn't. In fact, my B-12 blood level was about 30 points higher than the "normal" range, which as I recall topped out at 900 mg/dl.

My primary-care physician said, "There's nothing to worry about." A GI doctor said that he wasn't concerned either.

Because everything I've read on the subject indicates that excessive levels of B-12 could be an indicator of other disorders, I'm scared.

Should I see a hematologist for further testing?

— C.R.

Dear C.R.: The "normal" range for a given laboratory result is based on the range that is found in healthy individuals. Almost all characteristics you can think of — height, weight, blood pressure — have a range of values.

The "normal" is defined as where 95 percent of healthy people will fall.

That means that 5 percent of healthy people will be outside the range, even though there is nothing wrong with them. That almost certainly is what is happening with you.

Omeprazole and drugs like it do cause a slight, probably insignificant drop in B-12 levels. However, true B-12 deficiency from these medications hasn't been seen.

It is true that diseases associated with destruction of liver or white blood cells can cause these cells to release their B-12 into the blood.

When I have seen this, the B-12 level was in the several-thousand range, and there were many other blood abnormalities. I think it's very unlikely that anything like that is going on with you.

The booklet on heartburn explains GERD, a common disorder. Readers

Horoscope

TODAY'S BIRTHDAY (March 1). The warm, playful air about you attracts like-minded friends. The needs of your heart will be met in your professional life in April. You could even move for work and find that your new environs are just what were needed for personal success. June begins a deep renovation. Thankful loved ones celebrate you in August. Scorpio and Sagittarius people adore you. Your lucky numbers are: 5, 30, 2, 38 and 11.

ARIES (March 21-April 19). You mastered the art of being an exciting person long before you knew it was an art. You might say that excitement just comes with the territory of being an Aries. Others expect it from you now.

TAURUS (April 20-May 20). You've heard that times are tough, but you must be tougher than the times, because you go forward undaunted — maybe even a little pushy. If anything, the times seem to be intimidated by you today.

GEMINI (May 21-June 21). You create loveliness in your personal environment, and not because you're an artistic elitist but because it's life affirming to do so. Through the beautiful tone you set, you'll help others feel good.

CANCER (June 22-July 22). Feelings come and go. If you have someone in your life whose love for you is more constant than the passing emotions of the moment, that is something to celebrate.

LEO (July 23-Aug. 22). As you stroll a rather ordinary setting, you'll feel out of place. True, you were meant for the extraordinary. But sometimes it's up to you to make the environmental transformation happen.

VIRGO (Aug. 23-Sept. 22). The expression is true: The days are long, but the years are short. What can you do for 15 minutes a day that, by this time next year, will have added up to something remarkable?

LIBRA (Sept. 23-Oct. 23). You can be sure that your presence is a comfort to someone. You've suspected this, but it's wonderful to hear it outright and to feel the truth of it. You'll love knowing that you've helped.

SCORPIO (Oct. 24-Nov. 21). Some people wish they knew what others were thinking. You're different. You have a pretty good sense of what others are thinking, not to mention feeling, and you're not always sure you want to know.

SAGITTARIUS (Nov. 22-Dec. 21). When you participate in nature, you do not do so as an outsider and curator of the wild. You are nature, too. At least for some of the time, you will feel at peace with your place in the natural order.

CAPRICORN (Dec. 22-Jan. 19). Your mind is open. That doesn't mean it's empty. It is more challenging to be open-minded when you know as much about the world as you do. But you succeed in this because you let your curiosity lead.

AQUARIUS (Jan. 20-Feb. 18). Just because you believe an idea to be true doesn't mean you shouldn't question it. You'll have to poke around a bit for the truth, but when you find it, the sunshiny light will pour in.

PISCES (Feb. 19-March 20). It amazes you that people often don't know what will make them happy. Part of the reason is that there is so much misinformation in the world on the subject. You'll educate someone on the matter today.

Students honored at young farmer's state convention

Gleaner staff

Several Henderson Community College students recently attended the state convention of the Kentucky State Young Farmer Association held in Carrollton. Laura Winstead, agriculture professor at HCC, accompanied a group of students that included Bobby Householder, Kathryn Leslie, Tyler Chapman and Tyler Buckman to Carrollton from Feb. 21-24 for the convention, according to a news release.

All the students are enrolled in the college's agricultural technology program at the college and are members of the HCC Collegiate Young Farmer Chapter as well as the Kentucky State Young Farmer Association. Leslie received a $1,000 scholarship from Schaeffer Oil and Household was awarded a $500 scholarship from the Kentucky Young Farmer Association.

Household was also selected as the state winner in the agricultural mechanics knowledge contest.

Approximately 175 participants attended the convention and selected from seminars covering topics such as the current state of the federal farm bill and growing industrial hemp in Kentucky.

Participants also enjoyed tours of the Beef Connection and Carrollton Greenhouse Tobacco Supplies and a stop at Point Park, which is where the Kentucky and Ohio rivers meet.

General sign-up for Conservation Reserve Program announced

Officials have announced that the Kentucky Farm Service Agency will conduct a four-week Conservation Reserve Program general sign-up beginning May 20 and ending on June 14.

It is the goal of the agency to ensure that we use CRP to address our most critical resource issues. In 2012, many counties in Kentucky experienced extreme drought.

CRP protected environmentally sensitive lands from washing or blowing away. It gave ranchers extra grazing land when they needed it.

FSA expects there will be strong competition to enroll or reenroll acres into CRP, so Kentucky's producers are urged to maximize their environmental benefits and make sure their offers are cost-effective.

In addition to erosion control, CRP provides significant water quality benefits including reduced nutrients and sediment loadings and adverse consequences associated with floods as well as expanded and enhanced wildlife habitat.

Currently, about 27 million acres are enrolled in CRP nationwide, 302,782.7 acres in Kentucky.

CRP is a voluntary program available to agricultural producers to help them safeguard environmentally sensitive land.

Producers enrolled in CRP plant long-term, resource-conserving covers to improve the quality of water, control soil erosion and enhance wildlife habitat.

Contracts on an estimated 3.3 million acres of CRP are set to expire on Sept. 30, 2013, 34,767 of those acres in Kentucky.

Producers with expiring contracts or producers with environmentally sensitive land is encouraged to evaluate their options under CRP. Producers that are accepted in the sign-up can receive cost-share assistance for planting covers and receive an annual rental payment for the length of the contract (10-15 years).

Producers also are encouraged to look into CRP's other enrollment opportunities offered on a continuous, non-competitive, sign-up basis. Continuous sign-ups often provide additional financial assistance. Those sign-up dates will be announced later.

For more information on CRP and other FSA programs, visit your Henderson County FSA office or www.fsa.usda.gov.

REMINDERS

- 2012 acre production needs to be submitted to the Henderson County FSA office for the information to be updated.
- 2013 DCP/ACRE sign-up period has begun and producers need to call and make an appointment so contracts can be prepared and ready.

WICHITA — Years of drought are reshaping the U.S. beef industry with feedlots and a major meatpacking plant closing because there are too few cattle left in the United States to support them.

Some feedlots in the nation's major cattle-producing states have already been dismantled, and others are sitting empty. Operators say they don't expect a recovery anytime soon, with high feed prices, much of the country still in drought and a long time needed to rebuild herds.

The closures are the latest ripple in the shockwave the drought sent through rural communities. Most cattle in the U.S. are sent to feedlots for final fattening before slaughter. The dwindling number of animals also is hurting meatpackers, with their much larger workforces. For consumers, the impact will be felt in grocery and restaurant bills.

Cattle numbers have been falling for years as the price of corn used to feed animals in feedlots skyrocketed. The drought accelerated the process, but many feedlots were able to survive at first because ranchers whose pastures dried up weaned calves early and sent breeding cows to be fattened for slaughter.

But now far fewer livestock than normal remain on the farms. And, ironically, if it rains this spring and summer, even fewer animals will go into feedlots because ranchers will hold back cows to breed and rebuild their herds.

Texas, the largest beef-producing state, has been particularly hard hit with a historic drought in 2011 from which it still hasn't fully recovered.

"Most of the bad news is in Texas," said Dick Bretz, an Amarillo broker who specializes in selling feed yards and other agribusinesses. "That is where I see most of the empty yards, that is where I see most of the interest in selling yards and where I see the least interest in buying yards."

When corn prices first spiked to $8 a bushel nearly four years ago, about 70 big feed yards went up for sale in the High Plains feeding area that includes Texas, Kansas, Colorado and Nebraska, Bretz said. Today, there are 10 and 15 feed yards for sale in the region, mostly in Texas. Bretz said he knows of 15 more that are empty, three recently dismantled and two others now being torn down.

Feed yards typically employ one worker per 1,000 head of cattle, so even big ones may not have more than a few dozen workers. But they supply meatpacking plants, which have much bigger workforces, and feedlot closures could herald greater unemployment to come.

Cargill Beef, one of the nation's biggest meatpackers, temporarily closed a slaughterhouse in Plainview, Texas, this year, laying off 2,000 workers. The operation had been one of four meatpacking plants in the Texas Panhandle, and the annual economic loss to the region is estimated at $1.1 billion — a "major chunk of that economy," said Steve Amosson, an economist with the Texas AgriLife Extension Service in Amarillo.

INDIANAPOLIS — New calculations for property taxes on Indiana farmland will be delayed for another year under a bill that on Wednesday became the first to be signed into law by Gov. Mike Pence.

The measure — the first to reach the governor — unanimously cleared both the House and Senate in the past month in order to beat a March 1 deadline for when local assessors were to start using updated soil quality figures to determine tax bills for agricultural lands. Those changes were projected to lead to an average 25 percent increase in tax payments for farm owners.

Pence, who took office Jan. 14, signed the bill during a ceremony in his Statehouse office in front of a couple dozen farmers and legislative sponsors.

Pence said the proposal allows for "lowering taxes" on Indiana farmers, although the new calculations haven't been put into effect — and were also delayed by the Legislature during the 2012 session.

The bill requires the state Department of Local Government Finance and Purdue University agriculture researchers to prepare a review of the soil productivity measurement for the Legislature to consider next year.

Pence and others said it was important to head off the estimated $57 million increase in property taxes for the roughly 62,000 farms in the state.

The governor said the bill is important because it will help keep Indiana farms competitive and allow the state to "avoid an unnecessary tax increase by the imposition of an assessment that doesn't take in the unique challenges that Hoosier agriculture faces."

Assessors use the soil productivity measurement from the U.S. Department of Agriculture as one of the factors in determining the property tax bills for agricultural land.

The higher bills for farmers wouldn't mean greater overall tax collections for local governments, as the bills for other property such as residential, commercial and industrial would go down by a similar amount, said Rep. Robert Cherry, one of the farmland tax delay's sponsors.

Cherry said it was important for state officials to understand the changes in farmland tax assessment before farm owners see such a big increase.

Randy Kron, vice president of the Indiana Farm Bureau, said the organization believes the soil quality information is flawed and that having it studied more closely is among its top priorities.

"If it needs updating, it should go through the right authorities and the right people," said Kron, who farms about 2,000 acres near Evansville. "I think they'll find out, most likely, that there does not need to be a change to the factors right now."

Stream of new technology changing Nielsen

By David Bauder
Associated Press

NEW YORK — Every Tuesday, the Nielsen company publishes a popularity ranking of broadcast television programs that has served as the industry's report card dating back to when most people had only three networks to choose from.

And every week, that list gets less and less meaningful.

With DVRs, video on demand, game consoles and streaming services, tablets and smartphones, the way people watch television is changing and the industry is struggling to keep on top of it all. Even the idea of "watching television" is in flux. Are you "watching TV" when you stream an episode of "Downton Abbey" on a tablet?

Nielsen, which has long had a virtual monopoly on the audience statistics that drive a multi-billion dollar industry, last week took an important step toward accounting for some of the changes. Starting in September, Nielsen will begin measuring viewership through broadband devices like game consoles for the first time. Right now those numbers go uncounted.

"The ratings are a very one-dimensional look at what is happening," said Alan Wurtzel, top research executive at NBC Universal. "And we now live in a very multi-dimensional world."

Nielsen's weekly rankings count people who watch a broadcast TV show live or on their DVRs that same day through midnight on the West Coast. To be sure, this is still how most people watch television. CBS didn't need anything other than live numbers to know that its new reality show "The Job" was a flop, and canceled it a week ago after two episodes.

Eric Stonestreet, left, and Jesse Tyler Ferguson perform a scene from "Modern Family." Every Tuesday, the Nielsen company publishes a popularity ranking of broadcast television programs. Thanks to streaming and DVR, those rankings mean less.

Through separate, less publicized rankings, Nielsen can also track how many people see a program on a time-shifted basis. One ranking, which measures live viewership plus those who watch on DVR or video on demand within three days of the original airing, is what the industry uses to set advertising rates. Other rankings measure those who watch within a week, or even within a month.

Those numbers can present a much different picture of a program's popularity.

During the last week of January, for example, ABC's "Modern Family" ranked No. 12 for the week with 10.8 million viewers if you count just the people who watched on Wednesday, Jan. 23. But within seven days, 15.9 million people had seen the episode, enough to make it the third most popular show of the week behind two "American Idol" episodes. Fox's "The Following" finished a modest 15th place initially, but its audience jumped by 45 percent over the next week, enough to lift the show to fourth place.

Meanwhile, almost all of the "60 Minutes" viewing is done live. The CBS news-magazine dropped from seventh place in the initial rankings to 15th after a week.

The time-shifted viewing can change a network's perception of a show. NBC would have likely canceled "The Office" years ago without this additional audience.

"The idea of how many people are watching a program and caring about the show becomes increasingly important, and it is not reflected in the Tuesday report," Wurtzel said.

CBS considers its freshman drama "Elementary" a case of public perception not matching reality. Last fall, the show averaged 9.7 million viewers — respectable, but hardly a sensation. But between video on demand, DVRs and streaming, CBS said an average of 13 million people watched each episode within a month of its airing.

"If the number the press had seen was 13 million instead of 9.7 million, it would have been seen as a huge hit," said David Poltrack, CBS chief researcher.

In a world where people demand information faster and faster, television executives are no different. They want ratings now. The problem is, all of the changes in content consumption demand patience. Nielsen's report on how many people watch a show within seven days isn't released until three weeks after a show first airs — a glacial pace.

"We have to basically train the entire industry to no longer look at the fastest information, which is preliminary and not necessarily reflective of what the reality is," Poltrack said.

Each week the average American spends 32 hours and 15 minutes watching live television, according to a Nielsen study issued last month. More than 12 hours is spent either watching time-shifted TV or DVDs, playing on game consoles, surfing the Internet or watching video on computer or mobile devices, the study said.

Winter Olympics could keep 2014 Oscar envelopes closed until March

By Derrik J. Lang
Associated Press

LOS ANGELES — While the giant Oscar statues are still being washed off and stowed away, planners are already struggling with the timing for next year's show in what could be a very early and very late awards season because of the 2014 Winter Olympics, which fall right in the middle of things from Feb. 7 to 23.

Oscar organizers have yet to make a decision about next year's schedule, but the motion picture academy and broadcaster ABC avoided the Winter Games in 2006 and 2010 by pushing the show to March, after originally moving up the telecast to late February from March in 2004. This was partly in response to the awards fatigue factor, given all the ceremonies now populating the period. In earlier decades, the Oscars — pretty much the only show in town — were held in March and even as late as April.

"They don't have a lot of wiggle room," said Brad Adgate, research director for media-buying company Horizon Media. "I would suspect next year's Oscars will be held in March. The Academy Awards have never been held in January. They're always the final show during awards season, and obviously the most prestigious and highest rated."

The Screen Actors Guild and Producers Guild of America have already announced that they're moving up their 2014 ceremonies to Martin Luther King weekend on Jan. 18 and 19 respectively to avoid the Winter Olympics in Sochi, Russia, and the Super Bowl at the MetLife Stadium in East Rutherford, N.J., which is set for Feb. 2.

The timing of the Winter Olympics is likely to affect other awards shows, too.

Dates for next year's Grammys and Golden Globes shows, as well as ceremonies for the Directors Guild and Writers Guild, have yet to be announced. There could be a month-long gap between the 86th annual Academy Awards and all other awards season ceremonies, if those shows are scheduled for January and the Oscars end up in March. This raises concerns for Oscar organizers about potential loss of interest and momentum for nominees, which ultimately could dampen the show's all-important TV ratings.

Such concerns have been partly behind a push in recent years to move up

PUBLIC NOTICE

NOTICE OF PROPOSED
ISSUANCE
KPDES GENERAL PERMIT
NO. KYR000000
FOR INDUSTRIAL
STORMWATER

Pursuant to KRS 401 KAR
5:060, Section 8 the Division of Water proposes to issue a general permit for industrial stormwater.

KYR000000 This is a reissuance of a general KPDES permit to address stormwater runoff from industrial activities that are not more appropriately addressed by an individual KPDES permit, an alternate general permit, or a state issued permit. The following point source discharge of stormwater runoff are subject to the KPDES permit program: (1) the discharge of stormwater runoff associated with industrial activity or (2)
a discharge, as determined by KDOW, that contributes to a violation of a water quality standard or is a significant contributor of pollutants to water of the Commonwealth.
This permit is available for any facility that would be required to have a KPDES permit due to the discharge of stormwater runoff associated with industrial activity provided the facility meets the eligibility and Notice of Intent (NOI) requirements of this permit.

Copies of the draft permit, fact sheet and other support material may be viewed by using

Today in history

The Associated Press

Today is Friday, March 1, the 60th day of 2013. There are 305 days left in the year.

Today's highlight in history:

On March 1, 1790, President George Washington signed a measure authorizing the first U.S. Census.

On this date:

In 1872, President Ulysses S. Grant signed an act creating Yellowstone National Park.

In 1932, Charles A. Lindbergh Jr., the 20-month-old son of Charles and Anne Lindbergh, was kidnapped from the family home near Hopewell, N.J. (Remains identified as those of the child were found the following May.)

In 1954, Puerto Rican nationalists opened fire from the gallery of the U.S. House of Representatives, wounding five congressmen.

In 1961, President John F. Kennedy signed an executive order establishing the Peace Corps.

Ten years ago: Suspected 9/11 mastermind Khalid Shaikh Mohammed was captured by CIA and Pakistani agents. Iraq began complying with orders from U.N. weapons inspectors to destroy its Al Samoud II missiles. The United Arab Emirates called for Saddam Hussein to step down, the first Arab country to do so publicly.

Five years ago: The USS New York, an amphibious assault ship built with scrap steel from the ruins of the World Trade Center, was christened at Avondale, La. New York's famed Plaza Hotel reopened after a three-year, $400 million renovation.

One year ago: Senate Democrats narrowly blocked, 51-48, an effort by Republicans to overturn President Barack Obama's order that most employers or their insurers cover the cost of contraceptives. Maryland Gov. Martin O'Malley signed a measure legalizing same-sex marriage, effective Jan. 2013. Online publisher and conservative blogger Andrew Breitbart died in Los Angeles at age 43.

BEST BETS

5 p.m. on 10
Movie: Definitely, Maybe

In the midst of a divorce, a man (Ryan Reynolds) tells his daughter (Abigail Breslin) the story of how he met her mother — making this akin to the television series with the same premise — in this enjoyable comedy with the feel of (and many of the same producers as) “Love Actually.” Since Dad changes the names, the girl has to guess which of the women — played by Rachel Weisz, Isla Fisher (“Wedding Crashers”) and Elizabeth Banks — is her mom.

7 p.m. on 25
Last Man Standing

Mike (Tim Allen) engages in some mind games with Mandy and Kyle (Molly Ephraim, Christoph Sanders) to keep them from staying out too late. Kristin (Amanda Fuller) tries to keep Boyd from finding out that she’s dating Ryan (Jordan Masterson) in the new episode “Breaking Curfew.” Nancy Travis also stars.

7 p.m. on 7
Nikita

Acting on a tip that Birkhoff (Aaron Stanford) received from Shadowbot, Nikita and

Aaron Stanford

Owen (Maggie Q, Devon Sawa) swoop in to pick up Ari (Peter Outerbridge) before the FBI can get him. He tells them that Amanda (Melinda Clarke) is working with a terrorist (Peter Marek) planning an attack on American soil, and he has information that could lead them to the terrorist — for a price — in the new episode “With Fire.”

7 p.m. on 44
Undercover Boss

In this episode of the addictive reality series, Mitchell Modell, CEO of Modell’s Sporting Goods, which has more than 150 stores in the Northeastern U.S., gets a taste of what life is like for his company’s rank-and-file employees.

7 p.m. on 13
NBA Basketball

Two pairs of likely playoff teams come to loggerheads tonight in this ESPN doubleheader, which gets going with this duel in Miami between the LeBron James-led Heat and Zach Randolph and the Memphis Grizzlies. Then in the late game, it’s a battle between the top two teams in the Northwest Division when Kevin Durant and the first-place Oklahoma City Thunder drop in on Ty Lawson and the Denver Nuggets.

8 p.m. on 25
Shark Tank

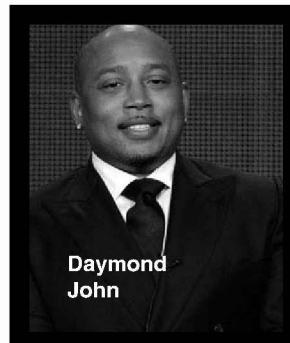

Removing your own tattoos? Sounds painful, but two guys from Colorado have created a device that allows people to do it at home. Also in this new episode: Three Rhode Island men seek an investment from the Sharks in their line of sugar-free, fortified nut butters; a California mom has designed a wristband to prevent motion sickness that also looks stylish; and an Arkansas woman has created a shoe that can be converted from a stiletto heel to a wedge.

8 p.m. on 7
Spartacus: War of the Damned

Spartacus (Liam McIntyre) comes up with a strategy that he believes will weaken Crassus’ (Simon Merrells) forces and give him an advantage, but a betrayal puts his plan in jeopardy in the new episode “Blood Brothers.”

8 p.m. on A
Duck Dynasty

This creature-feature reality series follows the Robertson family, which owns and operates a Louisiana sporting goods empire called Duck Commander. Having made their fortune fabricating top-of-the-line duck calls and making decoys out of salvaged swamp wood, the rags-to-riches Robertsons are led by business-savvy Willie, his brother Jase, their wives Korie and Missy, Uncle Si, and the patriarch and founder of the company, Phil.

8:29 p.m. on 60
Nathan For You

Nathan Fielder (“Jon Benjamin Has a Van”) is going to turn the economy around, one small business at a time. Armed with a business degree and life experience, he looks for outrageously innovative ways to help struggling small businesses turn a profit. Whether it’s introducing a controversial new flavor at a yogurt shop or finding a legal way for a gas station to charge $1.75 per gallon and stay in the black, his methods often yield unexpected results.

9 p.m. on 44
Blue Bloods

When Danny (Donnie Wahlberg) becomes obsessed with finding the person who killed an undercover detective in the line of duty, Linda and the boys (Amy Carlson, Tony and Andrew Terraciano) become concerned about the toll the search is taking on him emotionally. Tom Selleck and Bridget Moynahan also star in “The Life We Chose.”

Simon Merrells

9 p.m. on 10
Banshee

As Carrie (Ivana Milicevic) urges Lucas (Antony Starr) to let go of the past, her own is under scrutiny from Gordon (Rus Blackwell), and the arrival of Rabbit’s lieutenant (Christos Vasilopoulos) brings back memories. Alex’s (Anthony Ruivivar) family gets a surprise visitor while keeping vigil at Benjamin’s (Russell Means) sickbed. Rebecca (Lili Simmons) seeks Proctor’s (Ulrich Thomsen) help starting over in the new episode “We Shall Live Forever.”
